THRONG CHEERS

Leader Renews Oath he Took in Lamp-lit Vermont Room.

By GEORGE R. HOLMES

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Casting aside the ostentatious display and glittering pageantry of other years, Calvin Coolidge bared his head to the chill March wind, on the plaza of the capitol today and in one of the simplest inaugural ceremonies on record, renewed the oath of office that he originally took nineteen months ago in the lamp-lit room of his father's Vermont farmhouse under tragic and dramatic circumstances.

Cheering Thousands Look On.

A handful of hastily garbed, awe-struck relatives were the sole witnesses of that other ceremony 19 months ago, but today there were cheering thousands in the multitude that looked on and acclaimed him—completing a cycle of events unparalleled in the history of the republic.

A few moments after he had repeated the words of the oath intoned by the black-robed chief justice, Calvin Coolidge squared his shoulders, faced the panoramic sea of humanity in front of him and proclaimed to the country and to the world the basic principles which will guide him in the conduct of the nation's affairs for the next four years.

These, he said, would embrace peace

DAWES TAKES OFFICE OATH

Cummins Presides at Ceremony on Rostrum of Senate.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Charles Gates Dawes, of Evanston, Ill., this afternoon was inaugurated vice-president of the United States.

Standing on the rostrum where, for the next four years, he will preside over the senate, Dawes was administered the oath by Senator Cummins, Republican, of Iowa, retiring president pro-tem. Cummins had occupied the chair since teh elevation of President Coolidge to the White House in August, 1923.

The brief ceremonies in the senate were in strictest accord with entire unpretentious inaugural program.

A distinguished company, including President Coolidge and all the high officials of the government, witnessed Dawes' inauguration.

As soon as he had taken the oath, Dawes assumed the chair, and after a prayer by the chaplain, delivered a brief address. He then read the presidential proclamation, calling the senate into extraordinary session. This

WASHINGTON, March 4.—"Our most important problem is NOT to secure new advantages, but to maintain those we already possess."

With this sage observation concerning the task at hand, Calvin Coolidge assumed the presidency of the United States today, and in one of the shortest, simplest inaugural addresses on record pledged himself to continue for four years the policies he has already inaugurated.

These policies he set forth in his brief address as follows:

Abroad—A continuation of American helpfulness and co-operation where deserved; aloofness from the political quarrels and jealousies of the Old World; with America setting a moral example for the world in moderate armament, and displaying a willingness always to substitute the rule of reason for the rule of force.

At home—A continuation of the rigid economy in government that already has marked his administration; further tax reduction; encouragement to American business; enforcement of laws; party responsibility in government; and non-interferece by the government in legitimate private business.

Those who came to the wind-swept Plaza of the Capitol today expecting to see "a new Coolidge" stepping into the Presidency in his own right, and accompanying it with a glittering speech setting forth new policies and new goals, were not accorded any such spectacle.

Showed Calmness.

With the same calmness that has ever marked his official acts, Mr. Coolidge simply interpreted the November election as a national endorsement of his administration and a mandate from the people to continue along the roadway he has been traveling.

He presented no detailed program of administration effort for the next four years; he urged no great reforms; he advocated no radical changes—he said that America is the most fortunate and favored of all nations, now enjoying an era of great prosperity, and it would be his unceasing endeavor to keep it that way.

He served unmistakable notice that under his leadership the Republican party will be a disciplined party, and, indirectly, he referred to and endorsed the expulsion from the party of the La Follette rebels who broke away from the Republican standard in the last campaign.

"If there is to be a responsible party government," he declared, "the party label must be something more than a mere device for securing office. Un-

Nazarene Church Vacates Quarters Leased to Moyer Brothers.

Edward Dickson, Steubenville, deputy state inspector of factories and workshops, yesterday, ordered the razing of the front and west walls of the Wasbutzky building, one of the three structures, destroyed in the $750,000 blaze, which wiped out a section of the Fifth street and Diamond alley business district on February 22.

Dickson came here at the request of deputy state fire marshals, who have been probing the fire. After an inspection, he announced that the two walls of the structure were not safe.

Rebuild In Spring.

The inspector and Safety Director S. E. Anderson notified Mrs. Mendel Wasbutzky, owner of the building, that the walls must be torn down. She promised to comply with the order at once.

Thousands of Spectators Line Pennsylvania Avenue for Great Spectacle of Change of Administration.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The curtain went up promptly at 11 o'clock today on the capital's great quadrennial spectacle of the death of one administration and the birth of another.

At that hour, President Coolidge left the executive mansion for the capitol and the seat of government for the time being was transferred to the great grey dome at the end of Pennsylvania avenue.

Preceded by a troop of cavalry and a troop of mounted police, the presidential automobile, containing Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge and Senator Curtis of Kansas, Republican leader of the senate, proceeded slowly through Pennsylvania avenue, lined with thousands of spectators.

The presidential party arrived at the capitol at 11:16 a. m. President Coolidge went to the president's room in the senate wing and General Dawes went into the vice president's room.

Coolidge Address Is Broadcast for 700 School Pupils

By means of a radio set, installed through the courtsey of the Risinger Electric company, more than 700 members of the high school here "listened in" on the Coolidge inauguration ceremonies today.

The students were dismissed for lunch at 10:35 a. m., reporting back at 11:15 o'clock. They were assembled in the high school auditorium.

A program of flag drills, orchestra music and other features was given during intermission in the Wasnington program when the radio was silent. The exercises closed at the conclusion of President Coolidge's address, shortly before 1 o'clock.

There was no noon hour recess in the high school, the 40-minute dismissal in the forenoon taking its place. This is the first time that the high school students have been permitted to "listen in" on the inaugural.

C. C. McCauley Agrees To Pay $69.30 Check After His Arrest

C. C. McCauley of Washington avenue, Wellsville, was at liberty today after arranging in the court of Justice P. V. Mackall to make good a check for $69.30 drawn on the Citizens' National bank and given G. R. Cunningham, Newell grocer.

McCauley was arrested by Wellsville police and brought here by Constable T. C. Martin. He was fined $100 and costs on a charge of uttering a worthless check, but the fine was suspended upon condition that he pay the costs in the case and make good the loss.

CHOICE HEAVIES HIT HIGH MARK

CLEVELAND, March 4.—Thousands of dollars were added to the value of Ohio today, when top quotations on the Cleveland live stock market reached $13.75 for choice heavies, the highest point since October 21, 1920.

Blazes in Rollins and Ammon Dwellings Call Firemen.

Three alarms were answered by the fire department during the 24-hour period preceding noon today.

Loss estimated at about $1,500 occurred when a frame garage, owned by Daniel J. Pauley, Chestnut street, caught fire from a gas stove about 5 o'clock this morning. The blaze was discovered by Verne Carson, who resides nearby.

Neighbors broke down the garage doors and pushed out an automobile belonging to Forrest Bennett. However, before the engine could be started, the car, standing in the alley, caught fire from the garage and was practically destroyed.

Upon the arrival of the firemen at the scene of the fire, they found a nearby plug frozen up and were forced to attach their hose to another plug further away.

President's Wife Wears "Joseena" on Trip to Capitol

WASHINGTON, Mar. 4.—When Grace Coolidge rode down Pennsylvania avenue this morning with her distinguished husband, she probably started a rush upon modistes and dressmakers that will last for several days.

All because the first's inaugural costume represented the ultra-ultra in the latest style.

Her dress was fashioned of "joseena." Its color was "Moonstone."

For the benefit of the novitiate, "joseena" is a new cloth, something of a cross between duvetyn and crash cloth with a dull finish.

"Moonstone" is the latest color to be evolved by those who prognosticate the fashions. It is a grey, somewhat darker than pearl, and with a warmer appearance.

The costume was an "ensemble" with a bodice of crepe de chine, and a collar of grey fox on the coat. Silver embroidery embellished the coat from shoulder to hem.

Mrs. Coolidge's hat was a modish spring model of straw, high crown and drooping, narrow brim, with a burnt-goose band.

Grey slippers completed the outfit.

J. M. Manor's Car Stolen as Owner Attends Theatre

Police today are searching for a Jewet sedan, belonging to J. M. Manor, Avondale stree, which was stolen from East Fourth street while Mr. Manor and his family were attending a theatre last evening.

Manor discovered the theft when he left the theatre about 10:45 o'clock and immediately notified the police. The car carried license No. 241-376.

Five Communists Arrested.

BARCELONA, March 4.—Five Communists were arrested by police today and many anarchistic pamphlets seized. Among those arrested was Oscar Solis, formerly an artillery captain, who was returning from Paris.

French Schooner Wrecked.

PARIS, March 4.—A French schooner has been wrecked on the reefs at Gipon, but the crew has been saved, according to a dispatch received here today.

DAWES, MOST PICTURESQUE FIGURE IN AMERICAN LIFE, BECOMES VICE-PRESIDENT; HE IS FINANCIER, BUT CANNOT TELL LIFE STORY IN ONE WORD

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Charles G. Dawes today became the thirtieth vice president of the United States.

It has been 146 years since John Adams assumed the same office under Washington. Adams was an outstanding figure of his time, and so were many of those who followed him—Jefferson, Burr, Clinton, Calhoun, Roosevelt. Great men and men NOT so great have been numbered among the twenty-nine predecessors of Charles Gates Dawes. And yet it is doubtful if any of them brought into public life a personality more colorful or a record more filled with brilliant and versatile achievement than "Hell 'n Maria" Dawes.

More Than Financier.

The formal biographies of Charles G. Dawes list his vocation as 'financier.' But they don't tell the story of his life in that one word. It is true he is one of the foremost bankers and financiers of the country, but he also has been, and still is on occasion:

An engineer,
A soldier,
An inventor,
A musician and a composer of music
A politician,
An oil magnate,
An economist of international renown,
A lawyer,
An author of note,
A philanthropist, whose benefactions amount to considerably more than the public realizes.
A shrewd stock market operator, and
A public utilities expert.

All in 60 Years.

All this in 60 years. And in between times he has found time to cultivate a taste for golf, for horses, for pipes, and for picturesque profanity.

Dawes has been in and out of public life several times over this span of 60 years, so he makes his re-entry on the Washington stage as an old, experienced actor who probably knows as much about the inside workings of the American government, its strength and its weaknesses, as any other official here.

He was a tall, gangling young man of barely 30 when he received his political baptism. It was in the McKinley movement in Illinois in the '90s. He was one of the chief directors of the McKinley campaign in the Middle West in 1896. He came to Washington the next year as Comptroller of the Currency, the youngest man ever to have held the post. He was 31 at the time.

He stayed on the job five years. When he left it was to organize and become head of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, which since 1902 has grown until now it is ranked as one of the foremost financial institutions of the country.

Interests Varied.

Coincident with his banking, he became interested in gas wells, oil wells, coal mines and what not, and he prospered to such an extent that today he is a very wealthy man.

The business of piling up dollars was fascinating, but it could not hold entirely the attention of a personality so energetic and dynamic as that of General Dawes.

He became interested in music at an age when most business men express their interest in this art with checks rather than by seeking knowledge about it. He became what the critics call an "autodidact"—that is, a self-taught player. The violin was his hobby. He mastered it and then turned to composing. His success at composing may best be judged by the fact that his "Melody in A" is one of the most popular bits in Fritz Kreisler's repertoire. It is a plaintive, haunting little lullaby—as different from the bluff exterior of Charles Gates Dawes as day is from night. Many people hear it on their phonographs without associating it with the explosive General.

His most widely known philanthrophy has been the establishment and maintenance of the Rufus Dawes hotel. It aids young men and men down on their luck, and thousands of men throughout the Middle West have been at one time or another the beneficiaries of its hospitality. It was established in memory of the General's only son, who met a tragic and accidental death soon after reaching his majority.

When the World War came along, General Dawes was 52 years of age. It offered him an outlet for the tremendous energies that have marked his entire career.

Pershing and he were old friends from Lincoln, Neb., where Dawes had been a practicing lawyer from 1887 to 1894.

Two months from the day war was declared he was wearing a major's uniform and commanding a battalion of railroad engineers. A month later he was in France—one of the first civilian officers to reach the other side. Pershing particularly wanted railroad personnel to prepare the lines of communication for the millions to come.

Because of his great executive experienced and all-around business ability, Pershing made him General Purchasing agent of American Expeditionary Forces in September, 1917, and he served in that capacity, and later, as the American member of the Inter-Allied Purchasing Board, throughout the war.

The campaign of 1920, with Harding opposing Cox reawakened Dawes' love of politics, and he plunged into it with fervor. He was one of the "best minds" that surrounded Harding at Marion and he was a frequent visitor to the White House after Harding was inaugurated.

Harding persuaded him that there was a great field of public service in the Directorship of the Budget. The Budget had just been established by law; Dawes had always been in favor of it, and so he became the first director of the scheme to co-ordinate and put governmental expenditures on a business like basis.

Back to Europe.

He got the system nicely established, and then his restless spirit started looking for new worlds to conquer.

Europe was in a mess. France was

His Father, Coatless and Collarless Administered Oath in Country Home Far up in Vermont.

By GEORGE F. DURNO.

WASHINGTON, March 4—Nineteen months ago to a day, while the nation still gasped at the sudden and unexpected passing of its President, a mild-mannered, slightly stoop-shouldered man of no outstanding physical characteristics, slipped quietly into Washington to take over the exacting duties of State which had been largely responsible for President's Harding's death.

The night before—and the setting was indicative of the man—Calvin Coolidge had taken the oath of office in the country home of his father far up in the Vermont hills. A single, flickering oil lamp lighted the ceremony. His father, coatless and collarless, administered the oath, as telegraphed hurriedly from Washington.

Perhaps a thousand of the more curious citizens had assembled outside the hotel, wherein was set up a temporary "White House," to observe the coming of their new President.

The motor conveying him drew up to the curb. The ever-present Secret Service men opened a path for him and he walked briskly through the entrance.

Was Unrecognized.

The crowd gave no sign of recognition. It waited on. When was the President coming? it asked. It was half an hour before police convinced the last one of that curious thousand citizens that the man they had gathered to see had passed inside.

Calvin Coolidge, who for two years and a half had served the nation in Washington as Vice-President, had returned virtually unknown.

Today that man is taking the presidency in his own name—the award of 16,000,000 voters. His name and face are known in the four corners of the earth.

In a year and seven months President Coolidge has established himself firmly in the annals of American politics. His methods have been unique; his actions have defied many political precedents; but, nevertheless, they have been accounted successful. In that short time the man who, rumor stated, was to be dropped from the national ticket to make room for one or more forceful appearance, climbed up to the top of the ladder and established himself in his own right.

Quietly, and in a manner foreign to the politicians as popularly pictured, Calvin Coolidge plodded through the remaining months of Harding's term of office and literally lifted himself into four more presidential years. He conducted his administration in a methodical fashion, strangely reminiscent of the small-town merchant; and, as the small-town merchant often is successful, so President Coolidge has been termed successful.

Is Very Retiring.

Reticent and retiring, possessed of none of the oratorical ability usually vested in the successful politician, the president has operated under what were counted major handicaps at the outset of his administration. What had been held to be handicaps were converted into virtues. The voters were impressed with the fact that Calvin Coolidge was safe and sane, and their vote of confidence was one of the largest on record.

The conduct of the Presidential office under Coolidge is a matter of highly ordered routine, calculated to dispose of a maximum amount of work during a certain portion only of the day. C. Bascom Slemp, who retired today as secretary to the President, installed much of the system; the President's natural inclination and mode of life brought about the rest.

Every morning, from 9 to 12:30 o'clock, the President receives callers by appointment. Each visitor is allotted from one minute to fifteen minutes. No interviews are scheduled in the afternoon; and after lunch the President returns to his office and disposes of routine, which includes the signing of mail matter and the perusal of official reports.

For this daily routine Coolidge keeps himself fit with a minimum of exercise. Unlike his predecessors, he has no leaning towrad athletic diversion. He does not play golf, as did Wilson and Harding. Horseback riding, swimming, fishing and other sports usually indulged in by men in their fifties are not included in the President's scheme of entertainment.

Artificial Horse.

Instead, President Coolidge arises early every morning and takes a short walk. After lunch he takes a brief nap, and just before dinner he takes another short walk. An early retiring hour and meals at regular hours complete his formula for keeping physically fit. He also takes exercise on an artificial horse.

Under this schedule, Coolidge has gained eight pounds in weight. He looks better than he has looked at any time since coming to Washington. He seems to be thriving in the man-killing job that broke down his two immediate predecessors.

The President's chief diversion appears to come from the periodic trips on the yacht Mayflower. Hardly a week-end goes by that he and Mrs. Coolidge and a small party of friends do not take a short jaunt down the Potomac river.

And here again develops the unusual nature of the man. It is said by those who have accompanied him on the cruise that once aboard he keeps almost entirely to himself. His guests see him only at meal-times. He prefers complete relaxation, uninterrupted by the usual small-talk to be expected in such a social gathering.

Reports to the contrary, affairs of State are seldom discussed aboard the Mayflower. Sometimes, when a matter of importance is confronting the Administration, Mr. Coolidge will select his guest list from among those vitally interested in the issue. But he does not include himself in the conference, leaving the discussion to his guests.

Economy Keynote.

Economy has been the keynote of the Coolidge administration, and he carries his creed into his private life. Recently, on a trip to Chicago, the entire Presidential party traveled in an ordinary Pullman, because, as the President told his friends, he saw no reason why he should pay twenty-five fares for a private car that would accommodate but ten.

Another instance of his economical inclination is being given here today in connection with the inaugural ceremonies. Although local business men begged and pleaded for an elaborate ceremony, with one of the old time parades, the President was adamant. He vetoed, virtually in its entirety, the big program tentatively submitted to him by his inaugural committee.

The Puritan instincts of his New England forebears are the outstanding feature of America's thirtieth President. Taciturn, saving, addicted to ordered routine and simplicity, Calvin Coolidge, as his campaign slogan shouted to the nation, continues to "Keep cool!"

Crows Laugh at Scarecrow.

Jasper Ritz of O'Neil, Neb., put up a scarecrow in his hog feeding lot, but found that thousands of crows were calling daily, unmindful of the grim visage designed to scare them away. He then hit upon the idea of mounting a stuffed coyote on the scarecrow and the plan worked. His cornerig and feeding lot was immediately left unmolested.

First and Second Ladies of the Land

"The First Lady of the Land" and the "Second Lady of the Land" are devoted friends. Mrs. Coolidge and Mrs. Charles G. Dawes, wife of the vice president, are seen at the White House.

"Thundering Herd" Bigger Hit Than "The Covered Wagon"

"Variety," the nationally known theatrical publication, lauds "Thundering Herd," which is booked to appear in the near future at the Ceramic theatre, as the "greatest western picture since 'The Covered Wagon.'" Says "Variety:"

"The credit for the wallop goes to the director, Irvin Willat, who certainly has turned out a masterpiece of screen art in this production. It is a western that carries its thrilling punches done in snow. Willat's composition photographically is something that stands out tremendously. He has achieved groupings and scenes that rival the best that that great artist of the west, Frederick Remington, has done. Willat qualifies as the Remington of the screen after this one.

"Heading the cast are Jack Holt, Louis Wilson, Noah Beery and Raymond Hatton. This quartet stand out wonderfully well in their characterizations. Miss Wilson is coming along so strongly in pictures of this nature that it won't be long when the screen will have a woman western star and her name will be Lois Wilson. Jack Holt is doing some of the best work that he has ever done before the camera. Noah Beery is lighter in tone playing the heavy than usual and because of this creates a much better impression. Hatten with his suppressed comedy qualities perfectly, but there is another member of the cast to whom all credit should be given, Eulalie Jensen. Miss Jensen enacts the role of a heavy that is willing to stick a knife or fire a shot into anyone that crosses her and the manner in which she registers it makes her stand out remarkably. The rather youthful Maxine Elliott Hicks with only a rather small bit handles it sufficiently well to warrant notice.

"But it isn't the cast, the director, the story or the photography that makes "The Thundering Herd" a truly great picture. It is the thrills. They come along in the snow scenes and are without doubt the greatest punch wallops that have been seen on the screen in a long long while. So thrilling are the crashes of the wagons, the falling and kicking of the horses that women in the audiences gasp as they come to pass."

Waltz City Wars on Jazz

Vienna, long the dream waltz city, due to being the home of the great Johann Strauss, known as the "Waltz King" of Austria, and Franz Lehar, of 'Merry Widow' fame, has openly rebelled against jazz music of the "tom tom" type. Jazz bands imported from America have so gotten on the nerves of the Viennese, it is said, that an ordinance forbidding jazz music at dancing schools has been passed.

East Liverpool Man Got Rid Of Catarrh Quick

Began to Notice the Improvement From the First Day.

"Just want to say I have never used anything that gave me quick results as World's Tonic," said Mr. Sam Johnson a few days ago. Continuing, he stated that for eight years he had been a constant sufferer from catarrh and in that time had used may kinds of medicine recommended for this disease, but World's Tonic, he says, is the only thing that ever did him any real good. From the first few days he began to note improvement. It went right to the spot and by the time he had finished his first bottle, the dripping of the nasty mucus from head to throat that caused him to almost constantly be clearing and spitting and discharges of the nose stopped. The fullness in his head, huskiness of his voice inflammed throat and other distressing symptoms quickly disappeared. However, he said, "I expect to use two or six more bottles of World's Tonic to be sure the results are permanent."

Experts on catarrh say that the ravages of this disease in the final stages are almost unbelievable. No matter how slight an attack of catarrh you may suffer from, you should secure help at once, otherwise, serious developments are sure to come in the course of time, and frequently very quickly.

World's Tonic is something catarrh sufferers have long needed. It is a systematic treatment for catarrh and it is made especially to combat this disease. World's Tonic fights catarrh at its source, clearing up the system and has brought astonishing results in an exceedingly short time in countless cases.

COUNCIL PASSES 5 ORDINANCES

Three on Third Readings, Two Under Suspended Rules.

The service-safety fund ordinance, the civil service clerk pay ordinance, the special police pay measure were passed on third and final readings last night by council, and the rules were suspended to permit the municipal lawmakers to approve the city repairman ordinance and resolution repaying Mayor James Barnes for police expenditures.

The service-safety fund ordinance authorizes the distribution of collections from fines and forefeited bonds, two-thirds to the service fund and one-third to the safety fund.

The civil service measure provides an annual salary of $50 for the clerk of the board.

The special police pay measure, calling for a daily rate of $4.20 to be paid special officers who may be hired in times of necessity, required the vote of Council President Frank Blackburn before it was adopted. Council, previous to last night, had passed the measure on two readings by a four to three vote. Last night Councilman William Connor, one of the affirmative voters, was absent. President Blackburn's vote, which favored the measure, broke the three-three tie.

The city repairman ordinance creates that office, defines the holder's duties as of a general nature, as may be outlined by the service-safety director, and places his wages at 75 cents an hour, and his helper's at 65 cents an hour.

He will make daily reports to the service-safety director who will keep his and his helper's time, and direct their work.

The solons suspended rules in order to pass on third reading a resolution certifying the auditor to pay $50.40 to Mayor James Barnes. The latter expended that amount from his own purse during the recent prohibition activities.

Solons Ewing, White and Kerr, members of the council finance committee, were named as a committee to investigate progress on plans for the pavement of Eells avenue and Lisbon street.

City Engineer John George probably will be called into conference.

Councilman Nicholson, chairman of the street and lights committee, reported unfavorably on conditions at the Twentieth street sewer, a subject that has been up before council on numerous occasions.

He pointed out that the condition of the sewer made it a continual bill of expense and advised remedial action. As a result, solons decided to inspect the sewer on Thursday night at 5 o'clock. The traction company engineer probably will accompany them.

Councilman Nicholson also called attention to sewer conditions in Clark avenue, near the Buckeye Brick plant. He asserted that the sewer there was stopped up and that water from the brick company's clay mine is running into the street.

M. P. REVIVALS DRAW CROWDS

Revival services in the First Methodist Protestant church, Tenth and Main street, continue to merit an increase in interest and attendance. The pastor, Rev. R. Ernest Games, is being assisted by Rev. O. E. Vice, evangelist, of Coshocton, O.

The evangelist preached Monday night on, "The Broken Hedge," basing his discourse on Eccl., 10:8, "Whoso Breaketh a Hedge, a Serpent Shall Bite Him."

Rev. Vice pointed out various ways in which men break through God's hedges of restraint, always to their own ruin. At the close of the message many responded to the altar call and several confessed conversion.

Last night was "Guest Night" and delegations from neighboring cities attended.

Special music is being featured at each of the services. Last night a quartet composed of Miss Winifred Barnes, Mrs. Earl Adams, J. M. Culp and E. M. Householder presented a special number, "Oh, Saviour, Thou Art Standing," and Mrs. Elizabeth Burford Baker, of East Liverpool sang, "The Old Rugged Cross."

Tuesday night Rev. Vice spoke on the topic, "Where God Found Adam." Special music was supplied by Ed. Patch, of Wellsville, and Dr. and Mrs. O. L. Thompson, of Empire.

Wednesday night is Sunday school night when teachers and scholars of the Sunday school will attend in a body.

Rev. Games has extended an invitation to attend the services, which will continue throughout the week, with the exception of Saturday. The services will close on Sunday night.

CITY LAUNCHES FIRE HOSE PROBE

Is Wellsville out of step in the matter of fire hose connections?

This is the question which city council last night entrusted to Service-Safety Director A. P. Dennis for a solution.

The matter was brought up as a result of assertions made following the disastrous East Liverpool fire, in which Wellsville hose could not be used because of a difference in connections.

Councilman C. C. Ewing held the belief that hose connections in Steubenville, Toronto and Wellsville were uniform, and that East Liverpool's are different.

Director Dennis will endeavor to ascertain definitely if Wellsville needs new connections.

SOLONS PASS UP TAXING MEASURE

City council last night passed up proposed action on House bill 27, passed February 4, and approved February 10 by the governor.

The bill permits city legislative bodies and school districts to make tax levys to meet current indebtedness as of February 1, 1925.

It was pointed out that if the city takes advantage of the bill, city taxes would be increased.

Council heard the bill read, but took no action.

"North of 36" Film, At Liberty Theatre, Replete With Thrills

The journey of Columbus across the Atlantic in 1492 required no more courage than the trip made by the pioneers of the south in their attempt to establish a definite trail between Texas and the railroads in Kansas.

The first caravan traveling from the Gulf of Mexico to northern United States faced fearful odds—Indians, Carpet-baggers, floods, fire, wild animals, and many more obstacles described in Emerson Hough's historical novel, "North of 36," which Irvin Willat produced in picture form for Paramount.

Like Columbus, the first caravan had no guide save the compass and stars. Nobody had ever been over the trail before. Those who had attempted never returned to tell the tale. What happened, nobody ever knew.

The picture opens a three days' run at the Liberty Theatre, Wellsville today.

Typical Coolidge Message

Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts today became president of the United States "in his own right."

As thousands, massed in the broad plaza stretching eastward from the capitol building to the congressional library, watched and at least 20,000,000 other citizens "listened in" on the radio, he took the oath of office upon a Bible his grandmother gave him and from which he learned to read as a boy.

A few minutes before the administering of the oath by Chief Justice Taft, who 16 years ago was sworn at his own inauguration, Charles Gates Dawes, of Illinois, became vice-president, the ceremony occurring in the chamber of the senate.

After assuming the reins of the government, which he guided since the death of Warren G. Harding, President Coolidge delivered a typical Coolidge message to the American people. He pledged economy in government, urged America's entrance into the world court and expressed the wish that the United States might continue to prosper, that the lot of each man, woman and child might be a happy one. He did not waste any words in flowery rhetoric. Speaking from his heart, his utterances were those of a man who loves his country.

He voiced his desire that labor should receive full and adequate return; he reiterated his opposition to cancellation of any of the foreign debts; he said peace must come from the heart.

And, too, the president drove home the importance of saving the taxpayer's money, for he desires to lessen the burden now borne by the people.

He also made it clear that he opposes the use of a party label for the purpose of being elected to any office. In other words, he does not believe in preaching one thing on the stump and practicing another after election.

Of especial interest to American industry, struggling against cheap labor abroad, he declared his support of a protective tariff.

The Coolidge message, characterized by simplicity and earnestness, was typical of the man who has proved his qualifications for the high office bestowed upon him by his countrymen and women who expressed their confidence in him by an avalanche of votes last November.

Two Wars Are Over

A couple of good wars are apparently ended, aftermath and all. One of these is the Civil war, which has hung on in bitterness and misunderstanding for nearly 60 years. But north and south have now become really good friends, the south is becoming truly prosperous, and old wounds are pronounced healed.

The other war now happily ended is the American Revolutio nof 1776. Our public schools today teach the history of that conflict with more emphasis on the development of political liberty and the advance of constitutional government than on condemnation of British "redcoats" and a tyrant king. People are able to look at the Revolution as a part of history rather than as an intimate conflict in which they must take violently partisan sides.

The other day, in Washington, D. C., before an audience of 5,000 persons, the British ambassador was enthusiastically cheered when he presented a gold medal to a school girl as an award for her fine essay on "The Surrender of York, October 19, 1781. Its influence for the Welfare of the British Empire."

The World war of 1914-18 is not yet over in the sense that these two wars are. Will it take 150 years or even 60 years for the world to recover from it? Of course it was a bigger and more terrible war than any preceding it. On the other hand, the world today has better facilities for seeing things straight; it has had much experience to profit by, and it ought to have learned something about putting a finished war in its historical place. Neither the Revolution nor the Civil war will have to be fought over again. Only folly should make it necessary to suffer another World war.

THE PACIFIC MANEUVERS

WASHINGTON, March 4.—In the heat of the controversy raised by Brigadier General Mitchell's charges regarding the condition of the air service, the public has lost sight for the moment at least of one of the most important defensive tests ever undertaken by this country in time of peace, namely, namely, the approaching joint maneuvers in the Pacific.

One of the most disturbing statements made by General Mitchell before the house military affairs committee was to the effect that an enemy power could speedily overwhelm America's possessions in the Pacific ocean, that is, Hawaii, Guam and the Philippine Islands because of the weakness of this country's air defense.

Long before the aircraft inquiry was started the navy department and the war department had planned jointly to conduct maneuvers this spring in the Pacific to ascertain to what extent the security of the Hawaiian Islands is assured by the present defense plans of the United States.

From the naval and military viewpoint everything, as far as this region is concerned, hinges on Hawaii, or to be more accurate, on the island of Oahu, which contains the military garrisons and mortresses, the naval base at Pearl harbor and the city of Hononiulu. Let it be conceded that this pivot of America's outlying defense is weak, and the entire defensive system of the country west of the Panama canal crumbles. Hence the importance of the joint maneuvers.

Considered in the light of the world situation, the military and naval tests concentrated on Hawaii have added significance. The World war and the Washington conference shifted the center of naval startegy into the Pacific, with Hawaii as the hub of major operations in the event of a conflict. Under the terms of the Washington conference, Guam and the Philippines were practically abandoned as military and naval outposts, and consequently came a far-reaching revision of American strategy.

There is no secret as to what that strategy is in its major aspects. It is based on a few cardinal principles. The first and most important is so to strengthen the land fortresses and the naval bases as to leave the naval forces of the country the utmost degree of mobility to go wherever the exigencies of a given situation demand.

ATTRACTS WORLD-WIDE ATTENTION

In this scheme of defense there are two major pivots, namely, the Panama canal and the Hawaiian Islands. As long as the latter are held by the United States, with a strong and mobile naval force concentrated on Oahu our naval strategists assume that it would be suicide for a hostile force to attempt operations with the canal zone as the objective. With these strategic principles visualized, it is easy to understand why the first two joint maneuvers were based on the canal zone and why the coming tests are based on Hawaii. In all probability this year's tests will provoke more international attention than any military or naval maneuvers held since the conclusion of the World war.

At the first streak of dawn on the morning of April 15, the United States battle fleet will weigh anchor and steam out of the Golden Gate on the first leg of the voyage to Hawaii and Australia. The fleet will be designated as the "Blue Fleet" and at some point of the voyage its commander will receive wireless orders to consider himself as an enemy and to attack the Hawaiian Islands.

For the purpose of the war game, the latter will be referred to as the "Black Power" and the naval and military forces constituting the defense of the islands will receive a radio message that an attack is impending from a powerful enemy. The plan calls for operations to be conducted under conditions simulating war as closely as possible. It assumes, first, that the Hawaiian Islands do not belong to the United States but to the black power and that the blue fleet has been sent to capture them; second, that the islands are defended as at present by naval forces based on Pearl harbor and a military force amounting to some 15,000 men, including coast artillery and aircraft.

According to responsible sources, the purpose of the war game is three-fold:

First, to train the army and navy in joint operations, thereby aiming to overcome a defect centuries old, namely, the failure of most army and navy joint operations because of lack of team work.

Second, to test the adequacy of the present defense of Hawaii in order to ascertain what further preparations are necessary to resist a possible attack from a foreign foe.

Third, to try out new naval methods of attack against the defended point, including in this instance the co-operation of aircraft with the battleships of the blue fleet. It was the orginal intention to use a military landing force in conjunction with the blue fleet operations, but the lack of appropriations made it necessary to abandon this important feature of the maneuvers.

UMPIRES WILL DECIDE RESULT

The test will be presided over by a board of umpires. The chief of staff and the commander-in-chief of the fleet will occupy jointly the post of chief umpires. There will be a senior blue umpire and a senior black umpire. This board will decide the results of the operations. When a battleship comes under the fire of the shore fortresses and is unequal to the concentration of fire it will be declared out of action and compelled to raise the "sunk" flag. The same fate will overtake the fortresses that are outranged by the guns of the fleet.

Should the blue fleet be adjudged successful in the attack on Hawaii, it is probable that the umpires will make recommendations to the war and navy departments for the development of the defensive scheme of Hawaii. This was what actually happened two years ago when the black fleet, then the attacking enemy, succeeded in shelling the Gatun locks of the Panama canal. The lesson deduced was the need for more long range 16-inch guns wherewith the shore batteries can keep a fleet at bay at least long enough for the United States fleet to get through the canal and engage the enemy on equal terms on the Pacific side. Another important lesson was that more anti-aircraft guns were needed to ward off the danger of an air force's attacking the vital locks of the canal.

In the case of both the canal and Hawaii the plans for their defense by the United States is a developing proposition, the aim being to keep on strengthening them without calling for heavy appropriations at any one time. These tests made it possible to adjust and revise plans to meet every development in offensive tactics.

In regard to Hawaii the primary aim is to provide the navy with a secure base at the cross roads o fthe Pacific. With this base intact and our fleet in the Pacific, naval strategists assume that no enemy would risk an attack on the coast. The direct value of the islands as a base for offensive operations by an enemy lies, of course, in their geographical location two thousand miles from our coast, which is well within the radius of action of a hostile fleet. They are much closer to the canal than any other point that might be used as a base by an enemy in the Pacific.

This hub of the Pacific, the term used in military and naval parlance, lies 2,080 miles from San Francisco; 2,015 from the tip of Unalaska; 4,660 miles from the canal zone; $4,780 miles from Manila, and 3,440 miles from Yokohama.

Long before the World war and the Washington conference the strategic importance of the Hawaiian Islands had been recognized. Thus, Hamilton Fish, secretary of state, said in 1873:

"The Sandwich Islands (Hawaii) are an outpost fronting and commanding the whole of our possessions in the Pacific. Their transfer to a maritime power would threaten a military surveillance in the Pacific similar to that which Bermuda has afforded i nthe Atlantic."

The Toonerville Trolley That Meets All The Trains—By Fontaine Fox

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

O. O. McINTYRE

ON THE ATLANTIC, March 4.—All my life I have wanted to be in an ocean storm. It was not bravery. Merely a supreme faith that trans-Atlantic boats do pull through. Last night my ambition was realized. It was no sudden tempest. We rode in the teeth of a heavy gale before it broke.

With all the stoicism inbred in English seamen you sense disturbance. There is something taut and tight-lipped about them in an emergency. Nothing to them is "more than a bit of wind, sir." So the boat began to pitch, lunge and shiver.

Furniture, dishes and what-not skidded across the floor and back again. I improvised a strap for myself to hold me in bed. There were strange scurrying sounds down companionways and the soft patter of feet in halls. "Do you remember what I said about wanting a storm?" I said to my wife.

There was a feeble, "Yes." A dipping drop and then from me: "Well, I was just kidding." The door flew open with a mighty bang, lights went out and down the hall a baby began to cry. A 10 months old boy ill with tonsilitis, who will land at Plymouth for another 14-day journey to Capetown.

All night we were tossed about without sleep. The wind shrieked like the sirens on New York fire wagons. There were times when we seemed to poise for indeterminable minutes, like a toe dancer, on the crest of a wave and then that long despairing plunge.

I could not help but think of that lonely soul in the crow's nest—peering ahead into a world of snow like the white of eggs whipped to a creamy puff. There were many agonizing wails and cries for the ship's surgeon.

It grew worse toward morning. Yet there was a strange reaction. You begin not to care. We hold life dearly, but when we feel it is slipping away somehow we rise above our fears. If I were a religious person I should say: "That is God's way." At noon came calm.

In the hall I met an Englishman. "Gallant old girl!" he remarked.

"I'll say she is," I replied, and whistling walked out into the bright sunshine.

The ship's surgeon is a ruddy cheeked, powerfully built Englishman. When the storm began a young lady from New York was calling on us in our stateroom. A door crashed against her fingers gripped to a ledge. She grew white and slumped to the floor. The surgeon came and tried to examine the injured digits as the boat rolled. He seemed like a huge pacing bear in a cage as the boat swayed and rocked. He was on his way, he said, to perform an emergency operation in the steerage as the storm raged.

A storm completely disorganizes a ship so far as service goes. No one goes to the dining room and the effort to serve meals in rooms is a mighty task. Wet napkins are put on trays to hold dishes, yet when the food arrives it is a scrambled mess. For instance, I found a dish of succotash mixed up with my dessert. But I ate it just the same.

Every now and then a man from the wireless station plops into the lounge crying: "The following wireless messages have been received." He calls the moff with the enunciation of a subway guard and dashes out again. And a howl of laughter goes up.

There is a sweet-faced old lady and her white haired husband aboard. They are from the middle west. She calls him "Higbee." He calls her "Matilda." They are going to France to visit the grave of their grandson. It is pleasant to watch them thrilling to their first sea voyage. I thought of them quite a lot during the storm, too.

DINNER STORIES

The political boss of a small western city drove his buckboard at top speed down the main street on the morning of an election.

"Hey, Johnny!" he yelled to his son, "get down in the fourth ward, quick! There's people down there votin' as they blame please!"

He had advertised for a wife. Among the hundreds of answers one only interested him. The girl was the embodiment of all the domestic virtues and was considered beautiful by both sexes. The Nordic adventurer mailed his chosen applicant carfare to come the long distance to his town. With the check he enclosed a love letter throbbing with the endlessness of his devotion.

That night he re-read her letter. Her qualifications fulfilled his every wish. His anticipations were high. Then he noticed a little line on the next page. It said: "P. S.—As for my religion, I am a faithful member of the Baptist colored church."

A negro cook of middle age, who had saved considerable money, suddenly became engaged to a sporting man of her own race.

One morning her mistress saw her gazing abstractedly out of the kitchen window and inquired: "What's the matter, Hannah?"

"Well, mum," she replied, "with my husband-that-is-to-be everything goes with such lightnin' speed that I'm confused. Day before yesterday we got acquainted, yesterday we got engaged, and today I find he already owes me eighty-five dollars."

"Are you a clairvoyant?" a woman asked Mr. Cobb.

"Not that I know of," he answered.

"Do you ever talk in your sleep?" she went on.

"No, but I often talk in other people's," he said. "I'm a Chautauqua lecturer."

At the funeral of the wealthy M. Veryrich a man wept bitterly.

"Why are you crying?" asked a reporter. "You are not a relative of Mr. Veryrich, are you?"

"No," sobbed the mourner, "that's it!"

NEWSY GO SIP OF BIG CITIES

By COPELAND C. BURG.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., March 4.—A woman can keep a secret!

She is Mrs. Lou Tellegen.

All Hollywood is marveling because Mrs. Tellegen, known on the stage as Nina Romano, a player in the "Whole Town's Talking" and formerly Isabel Craven Dilworth, daughter of a Philadelphia millionaire, was married to the famous stage and screen actor for more han a year before the world heard about it.

Geraldine Farrar, grand opera star, called Lou the "perfect lover." She was Tellegen's second wife.

"He is more than that," says Mrs. Tellegen III. "He is the perfect nurse. He loves to care for babies."

The Tellegens have a son, born in Florida. He is a strapping youngster and, although less than a year old, is almost ready to talk.

The subconscious tone of poetry brought Tellegen and his bride to a plane of romantic understanding.

Beaudelaire and his subtle rhymes gave the first movement to their love-making, Mrs. Tellegen believes.

"Poetry was the principal insrument which afforded a common bond of interest beween Lou and I," she said.

"A phrase from Beaudelaire or Arnold or Byron seemed to express the emotion we held for each other.

"Fishing and poetry and worms—strange things!

"All of our romance was not quoting poetry, of course.

"The 'poem complex,' you might say, had another side. We often went on fishing trips during the time we were on tour, and these were many common, every-day things that towered in importance above the works of great writers. For the time being a certain species of worm, which was especially good to use as bait for perch or trout, would be the principal topic of conversation. Beaudelaire would be forgotten—the worm would hold the stage, and it was just as interesting to me to discuss fishing bait with Lou as it was for us to quote 'Indian Love Lyrics' to one another."

Pola Negri is now known as "Lonesome Polo."

Since Rod La Rocque went to Paris she has been seen seldom in Hollywood haunts.

Miss Negri, however, is going to Paris herself right away.

She also will visit her native Poland.

"I am going to Paris to buy gowns," Miss Negri declared.

Mrs. Jack London is coming to Hollywood.

Mrs. London does not fully approve of the fashion in which some of her husband's books have been adapted for the screen and will herself personally supervise future productions.

Alma Rubens, who is geting a divorce, has taken to morbid literature. She is reading John Masefield's "Widow of Bye Street."

Tom Mix is now said to have succeeded Ruth Roland as Hollywood's richest person. He is making $15,000 weekly.

Mary Pickford is worried because her pictures are so widely copied. She plans an early production "de luxe."

William Beaudine, formerly Mary's property boy, will direct Miss Pickford in her next picture.

Mary's husband, Douglas Fairbanks, is crushed by the thought this his next picture may not exceed his last in "punch" and popularity.

Harold Lloyd is in the same boat. The public demands that his comedies be funnier each year, and the strain has shown its effects on the young comedian.

Nazimova feels she is abused. She failed in producing high-brow films, and her art, she believes, is above the "sweet young girls" pictures her directors insist on selecting for her.

Mabel Normand is suffering the penalty of adverse publicity. Whether her "antics" will ever again be screened is doubted by many.

MUSSOLINI'S ILLNESS

Wild rumors are cabled from Italy concerning the illness of Premier Mussolini.

He is said to be dying of hemorrhages caused by ulcers in the stomach.

Another rumor says the Italian crown prince shot Mussolini in a quarrel. That's nonsense, and it would be base ingratitude. But for Mussolini and his revolution on the side of conservatism, Italy might have had a revolution sweeping the king from the throne.

Another story bestows upon Mussolini a case of blood poisoning caused by a scratch from his pet lion. The Italian statesman, probably has influenza, like thousands of others in Europe.

MAN'S GREATEST WAR

Science says the greatest battle of the human race is to be against insects and microscopic germs.

Those tiny enemies do infinitely more harm than ever was done by all the wild beasts and poisonous reptiles that men have gradually conquered. Insects and plant pests destroy billions every year in crops and forests. And germs destroy millions of lives.

The influenza germ that prostrates you today, and kills you when it finds its way up through the sinus cavity into the brain is older than civilization.

In former times it has been infinitely more deadly even than toward the end of the great war, when it killed about eight million people.

However, man, having destroyed the mammoth and the rhinoceros, when he had only a sharpened flint to work with will know how to overcome his insect and microbe foes with all science working for him.

Recent discovery of a disinfectant harmless to man, yet 50 times more powerful than carbolic acid means more to the really important war of the human race than any discovery of T. N. T. or poison gas. The important war is the war against disease.

BRITISH SECURITY

Mr. Chamberlain, of the British cabinet, sends a notice to the entire diplomatic force of the British empire to this effect:

"Number one: And far ahead of all other things in British policies stands British security. Everything else is unimportant compared with that."

Sentimental Americans that would have this country enter the league of nations as a world cure-all, will please think over this passage from Chamberlain's memorandum.

"The only possible British policy is to consult the British interests, leaving the league of nations, at some future time, to develop into an instrument of international peace."

The American policy is to consider American interests.

THE QUEEN BOBS HER HAIR

The queen of Belgium bobbed her hair and there is much excitement. Kings and queens take up new ideas cautiously. The king of England still drives to the opening of parliament in a gilded coach drawn by six or eight cream-colored horses. And he wears a crown on state occasions, although everybody knows that the crown has long been the property of the house of commons. If Carlyle, creator of "Sartor Resaris," were here, he would find deep meaning in the queen's bobbed hair.

Bernard Shaw says he is retiring, leaving the writing of plays and other things to "younger men." The fact is that there are few men really younger than Shaw. While his work will outlive his body by a very short time, it is the most remarkable and brilliant of his period.

Anatole France, another Celt, and highly praised was by no means Shaw's equal.

Rear Admiral Sims says the flying machine has made the battleship obsolete. It has, and the submarine made the battleship almost obsolete, before the flying machine proved its power.

It is possible that fighting in the air may make war itself obsolete.

The great nobleman of the middle ages lost a good deal of their enthusiasm for war when the musket with powder and ball came into use, and their elaborate suits of armor no longer protected them.

Typical Coolidge Message

Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts today became president of the United States "in his own right."

As thousands, massed in the broad plaza stretching eastward from the capitol building to the congressional library, watched and at least 20,000,000 other citizens "listened in" on the radio, he took the oath of office upon a Bible his grandmother gave him and from which he learned to read as a boy.

A few minutes before the administering of the oath by Chief Justice Taft, who 16 years ago was sworn at his own inauguration, Charles Gates Dawes, of Illinois, became vice-president, the ceremony occurring in the chamber of the senate.

After assuming the reins of the government, which he guided since the death of Warren G. Harding, President Coolidge delivered a typical Coolidge message to the American people. He pledged economy in government, urged America's entrance into the world court and expressed the wish that the United States might continue to prosper, that the lot of each man, woman and child might be a happy one. He did not waste any words in flowery rhetoric. Speaking from his heart, his utterances were those of a man who loves his country.

He voiced his desire that labor should receive full and adequate return; he reiterated his opposition to cancellation of any of the foreign debts; he said peace must come from the heart.

And, too, the president drove home the importance of saving the taxpayer's money, for he desires to lessen the burden now borne by the people.

He also made it clear that he opposes the use of a party label for the purpose of being elected to any office. In other words, he does not believe in preaching one thing on the stump and practicing another after election.

Of especial interest to American industry, struggling against cheap labor abroad, he declared his support of a protective tariff.

The Coolidge message, characterized by simplicity and earnestness, was typical of the man who has proved his qualifications for the high office bestowed upon him by his countrymen and women who expressed their confidence in him by an avalanche of votes last November.

They are much closer to the canal than any other point that might be used as a base by an enemy in the Pacific.

This hub of the Pacific, the term used in military and naval parlance, lies 2,080 miles from San Francisco; 2,015 from the tip of Unalaska; 4,660 miles from the canal zone; $4,780 miles from Manila, and 3,440 miles from Yokohama.

Long before the World war and the Washington conference the strategic importance of the Hawaiian Islands had been recognized. Thus, Hamilton Fish, secretary of state, said in 1873:

"The Sandwich Islands (Hawaii) are an outpost fronting and commanding the whole of our possessions in the Pacific. Their transfer to a maritime power would threaten a military surveillance in the Pacific similar to that which Bermuda has afforded i nthe Atlantic."

The Toonerville Trolley That Meets All The Trains—By Fontaine Fox

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

O. O. McINTYRE

ON THE ATLANTIC, March 4.—All my life I have wanted to be in an ocean storm. It was not bravery. Merely a supreme faith that trans-Atlantic boats do pull through. Last night my ambition was realized. It was no sudden tempest. We rode in the teeth of a heavy gale before it broke.

With all the stoicism inbred in English seamen you sense disturbance. There is something taut and tight-lipped about them in an emergency. Nothing to them is "more than a bit of wind, sir." So the boat began to pitch, lunge and shiver.

Furniture, dishes and what-not skidded across the floor and back again. I improvised a strap for myself to hold me in bed. There were strange scurrying sounds down companionways and the soft patter of feet in halls. "Do you remember what I said about wanting a storm?" I said to my wife.

There was a feeble, "Yes." A dipping drop and then from me: "Well, I was just kidding." The door flew open with a mighty bang, lights went out and down the hall a baby began to cry. A 10 months old boy ill with tonsilitis, who will land at Plymouth for another 14-day journey to Capetown.

All night we were tossed about without sleep. The wind shrieked like the sirens on New York fire wagons. There were times when we seemed to poise for indeterminable minutes, like a toe dancer, on the crest of a wave and then that long despairing plunge.

I could not help but think of that lonely soul in the crow's nest—peering ahead into a world of snow like the white of eggs whipped to a creamy puff. There were many agonizing wails and cries for the ship's surgeon.

It grew worse toward morning. Yet there was a strange reaction. You begin not to care. We hold life dearly, but when we feel it is slipping away somehow we rise above our fears. If I were a religious person I should say: "That is God's way." At noon came calm.

In the hall I met an Englishman. "Gallant old girl!" he remarked.

"I'll say she is," I replied, and whistling walked out into the bright sunshine.

The ship's surgeon is a ruddy cheeked, powerfully built Englishman. When the storm began a young lady from New York was calling on us in our stateroom. A door crashed against her fingers gripped to a ledge. She grew white and slumped to the floor. The surgeon came and tried to examine the injured digits as the boat rolled. He seemed like a huge pacing bear in a cage as the boat swayed and rocked. He was on his way, he said, to perform an emergency operation in the steerage as the storm raged.

A storm completely disorganizes a ship so far as service goes. No one goes to the dining room and the effort to serve meals in rooms is a mighty task. Wet napkins are put on trays to hold dishes, yet when the food arrives it is a scrambled mess. For instance, I found a dish of succotash mixed up with my dessert. But I ate it just the same.

Every now and then a man from the wireless station plops into the lounge crying: "The following wireless messages have been received." He calls the moff with the enunciation of a subway guard and dashes out again. And a howl of laughter goes up.

There is a sweet-faced old lady and her white haired husband aboard. They are from the middle west. She calls him "Higbee." He calls her "Matilda." They are going to France to visit the grave of their grandson. It is pleasant to watch them thrilling to their first sea voyage. I thought of them quite a lot during the storm, too.

DINNER STORIES

The political boss of a small western city drove his buckboard at top speed down the main street on the morning of an election.

"Hey, Johnny!" he yelled to his son, "get down in the fourth ward, quick! There's people down there votin' as they blame please!"

He had advertised for a wife. Among the hundreds of answers one only interested him. The girl was the embodiment of all the domestic virtues and was considered beautiful by both sexes. The Nordic adventurer mailed his chosen applicant carfare to come the long distance to his town. With the check he enclosed a love letter throbbing with the endlessness of his devotion.

That night he re-read her letter. Her qualifications fulfilled his every wish. His anticipations were high. Then he noticed a little line on the next page. It said: "P. S.—As for my religion, I am a faithful member of the Baptist colored church."

A negro cook of middle age, who had saved considerable money, suddenly became engaged to a sporting man of her own race.

One morning her mistress saw her gazing abstractedly out of the kitchen window and inquired: "What's the matter, Hannah?"

"Well, mum," she replied, "with my husband-that-is-to-be everything goes with such lightnin' speed that I'm confused. Day before yesterday we got acquainted, yesterday we got engaged, and today I find he already owes me eighty-five dollars."

Irvin Cobb was a guest at a dinner party in New York where tablerapping and other phenomena were discussed.

"Are you a clairvoyant?" a woman asked Mr. Cobb.

"Not that I know of," he answered.

"Do you ever talk in your sleep?" she went on.

"No, but I often talk in other people's," he said. "I'm a Chautauqua lecturer."

At the funeral of the wealthy M. Veryrich a man wept bitterly.

"Why are you crying?" asked a reporter. "You are not a relative of Mr. Veryrich, are you?"

"No," sobbed the mourner, "that's it!"

NEWSY GOSSIP OF BIG CITIES

By COPELAND C. BURG.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., March 4.—A woman can keep a secret!

She is Mrs. Lou Tellegen.

All Hollywood is marveling because Mrs. Tellegen, known on the stage as Nina Romano, a player in the "Whole Town's Talking" and formerly Isabel Craven Dilworth, daughter of a Philadelphia millionaire, was married to the famous stage and screen actor for more han a year before the world heard about it.

Geraldine Farrar, grand opera star, called Lou the "perfect lover." She was Tellegen's second wife.

"He is more than that," says Mrs. Tellegen III. "He is the perfect nurse. He loves to care for babies."

The Tellegens have a son, born in Florida. He is a strapping youngster and, although less than a year old, is almost ready to talk.

The subconscious tone of poetry brought Tellegen and his bride to a plane of romantic understanding.

Beaudelaire and his subtle rhymes gave the first movement to their love-making, Mrs. Tellegen believes.

"Poetry was the principal insrument which afforded a common bond of interest beween Lou and I," she said.

"A phrase from Beaudelaire or Arnold or Byron seemed to express the emotion we held for each other.

"Fishing and poetry and worms—strange things!

"All of our romance was not quoting poetry, of course.

"The 'poem complex,' you might say, had another side. We often went on fishing trips during the time we were on tour, and these were many common, every-day things that towered in importance above the works of great writers. For the time being a certain species of worm, which was especially good to use as bait for perch or trout, would be the principal topic of conversation. Beaudelaire would be forgotten—the worm would hold the stage, and it was just as interesting to me to discuss fishing bait with Lou as it was for us to quote 'Indian Love Lyrics' to one another."

Pola Negri is now known as "Lonesome Polo."

Since Rod La Rocque went to Paris she has been seen seldom in Hollywood haunts.

Miss Negri, however, is going to Paris herself right away.

She also will visit her native Poland.

"I am going to Paris to buy gowns," Miss Negri declared.

Mrs. Jack London is coming to Hollywood.

Mrs. London does not fully approve of the fashion in which some of her husband's books have been adapted for the screen and will herself personally supervise future productions.

Alma Rubens, who is geting a divorce, has taken to morbid literature. She is reading John Masefield's "Widow of Bye Street."

Tom Mix is now said to have succeeded Ruth Roland as Hollywood's richest person. He is making $15,000 weekly.

Mary Pickford is worried because her pictures are so widely copied. She plans an early production "de luxe."

William Beaudine, formerly Mary's property boy, will direct Miss Pickford in her next picture.

Mary's husband, Douglas Fairbanks, is crushed by the thought this his next picture may not exceed his last in "punch" and popularity.

Harold Lloyd is in the same boat. The public demands that his comedies be funnier each year, and the strain has shown its effects on the young comedian.

Nazimova feels she is abused. She failed in producing high-brow films, and her art, she believes, is above the "sweet young girls" pictures her directors insist on selecting for her.

Mabel Normand is suffering the penalty of adverse publicity. Whether her "antics" will ever again be screened is doubted by many.

MUSSOLINI'S ILLNESS

Wild rumors are cabled from Italy concerning the illness of Premier Mussolini.

He is said to be dying of hemorrhages caused by ulcers in the stomach.

Another rumor says the Italian crown prince shot Mussolini in a quarrel. That's nonsense, and it would be base ingratitude. But for Mussolini and his revolution on the side of conservatism, Italy might have had a revolution sweeping the king from the throne.

Another story bestows upon Mussolini a case of blood poisoning caused by a scratch from his pet lion. The Italian statesman, probably has influenza, like thousands of others in Europe.

MAN'S GREATEST WAR

Science says the greatest battle of the human race is to be against insects and microscopic germs.

Those tiny enemies do infinitely more harm than ever was done by all the wild beasts and poisonous reptiles that men have gradually conquered. Insects and plant pests destroy billions every year in crops and forests. And germs destroy millions of lives.

The influenza germ that prostrates you today, and kills you when it finds its way up through the sinus cavity into the brain is older than civilization.

In former times it has been infinitely more deadly even than toward the end of the great war, when it killed about eight million people.

However, man, having destroyed the mammoth and the rhinoceros, when he had only a sharpened flint to work with will know how to overcome his insect and microbe foes with all science working for him.

Recent discovery of a disinfectant harmless to man, yet 50 times more powerful than carbolic acid means more to the really important war of the human race than any discovery of T. N. T. or poison gas. The important war is the war against disease.

BRITISH SECURITY

Mr. Chamberlain, of the British cabinet, sends a notice to the entire diplomatic force of the British empire to this effect:

"Number one: And far ahead of all other things in British policies stands British security. Everything else is unimportant compared with that."

Sentimental Americans that would have this country enter the league of nations as a world cure-all, will please think over this passage from Chamberlain's memorandum.

"The only possible British policy is to consult the British interests, leaving the league of nations, at some future time, to develop into an instrument of international peace."

The American policy is to consider American interests.

THE QUEEN BOBS HER HAIR

The queen of Belgium bobbed her hair and there is much excitement. Kings and queens take up new ideas cautiously. The king of England still drives to the opening of parliament in a gilded coach drawn by six or eight cream-colored horses. And he wears a crown on state occasions, although everybody knows that the crown has long been the property of the house of commons. If Carlyle, creator of "Sartor Resaris," were here, he would find deep meaning in the queen's bobbed hair.

Bernard Shaw says he is retiring, leaving the writing of plays and other things to "younger men." The fact is that there are few men really younger than Shaw. While his work will outlive his body by a very short time, it is the most remarkable and brilliant of his period.

Anatole France, another Celt, and highly praised was by no means Shaw's equal.

Rear Admiral Sims says the flying machine has made the battleship obsolete. It has, and the submarine made the battleship almost obsolete, before the flying machine proved its power.

It is possible that fighting in the air may make war itself obsolete.

The great nobleman of the middle ages lost a good deal of their enthusiasm for war when the musket with powder and ball came into use, and their elaborate suits of armor no longer protected them.

NEW WORDS BY THE THOUSANDS

The publishers abandoned the printing plates which they formerly used in printing their dictionary, and now every old dictionary in this city should be discarded, as recent activities have brought additional new words into our language. Here is a newly compiled dictionary, larger and more complete than any similar one—all the new words—new special features—every line of it newly compiled—with an enlarged vocabulary—averaging more words to the page—and all at a trifling outlay that must mean nothing to one that wishes to keep abreast of the times. This enlarged new dictionary is now offered to readers through

How to Talk
By FARQUSON JOHNSON
Consulting Editor New Universities Dictionary
Article No. 4

When we stop to think how well our ancestors got along with far fewer words, it would seem to discourage any attempt to enlarge our present vocabulary. But you must take into consideration the fact that there were fewer uses for words in those days. It was a slow moving world then—uneventful—plodding. It required many tiresome days to make things by hand that we now turn out in a few moments by modern machinery—and new inventions call for new words.

It was more than eight hundred years ago that our present language began to build itself, and upon rather a shaky foundation, at that. Even when Columbus sailed over to this side, which was more than four hundred years ago, very little progress had been made. Perhaps two hundred years will better mark the time when our present language would have been recognized in the spoken word of that time.

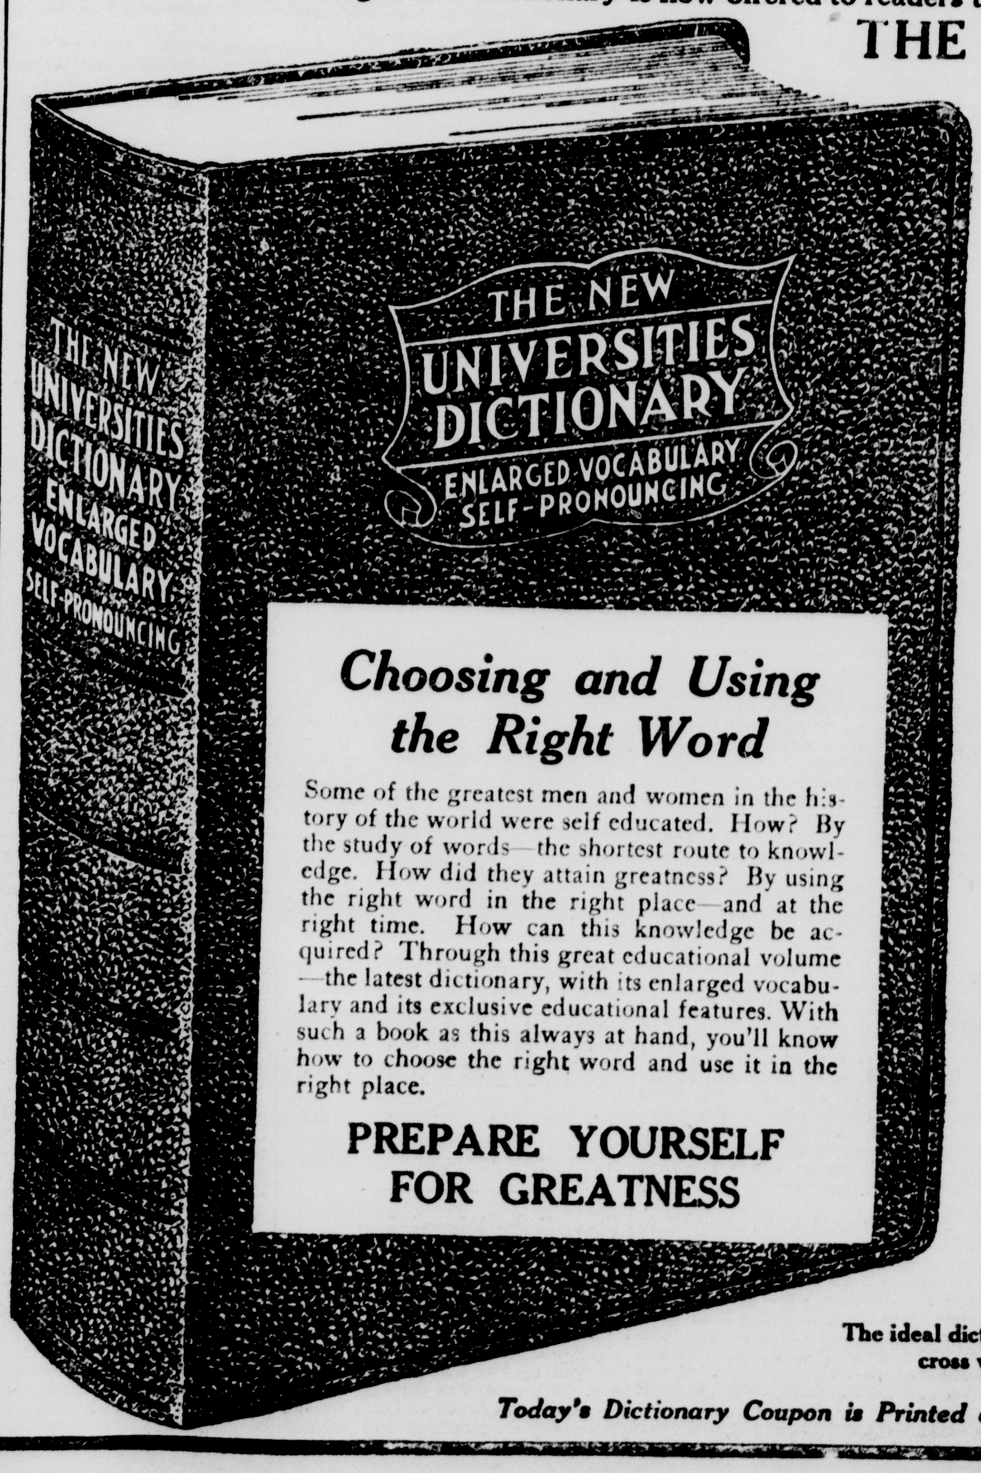

During those years we have passed through the age of great discoveries and inventions—all of which called for new words. Activities in science have brought their new words. Progress in every line of human endeavor has developed a need for new words. And now radio, aviation, and other inventions and discoveries, have been giving us more new words than we could comfortably take care of for the past year or two.

So you need a new dictionary to keep up with the times. But, when you go to buy one, ask when it was compiled. Find out if it really is new, or an ancient reprint. If it should happen to be a very old one with a few new words inserted and then reprinted with a recent date, it will not be worth the price, whatever it may be. It would be like buying a second-hand hat which was out of style years ago.

Fashions change in words and their meanings as they do in wearing apparel; and not to be familiar with the modern usage of words is like being a back number in the style of dress. You cannot afford to be known as one who is so far behind the times. Keep up with modern language through the dictionary that is newly compiled with an enlarged vocabulary.

And don't forget that it requires more than a new date to make an old dictionary modern.

NEW WORDS BY THE THOUSANDS

The publishers abandoned the printing plates which they formerly used in printing their dictionary, and now every old dictionary in this city should be discarded, as recent activities have brought additional new words into our language. Here is a newly compiled dictionary, larger and more complete than any similar one—all the new words—new special features—every line of it newly compiled—with an enlarged vocabulary—averaging more words to the page—and all at a trifling outlay that must mean nothing to one that wishes to keep abreast of the times. This enlarged new dictionary is now offered to readers through THE R VIEW TRIBUNE

How to Talk
By FARQUSON JOHNSON

Article No. 4

When we stop to think how well our ancestors got along with far fewer words, it would seem to discourage any attempt to enlarge our present vocabulary. But you must take into consideration the fact that there were fewer uses for words in those days. It was a slow moving world then—uneventful—plodding. It required many tiresome days to make things by hand that we now turn out in a few moments by modern machinery—and new inventions call for new words.

It was more than eight hundred years ago that our present language began to build itself, and upon rather a shaky foundation, at that. Even when Columbus sailed over to this side, which was more than four hundred years ago, very little progress had been made. Perhaps two hundred years will better mark the time when our present language would have been recognized in the spoken word of that time.

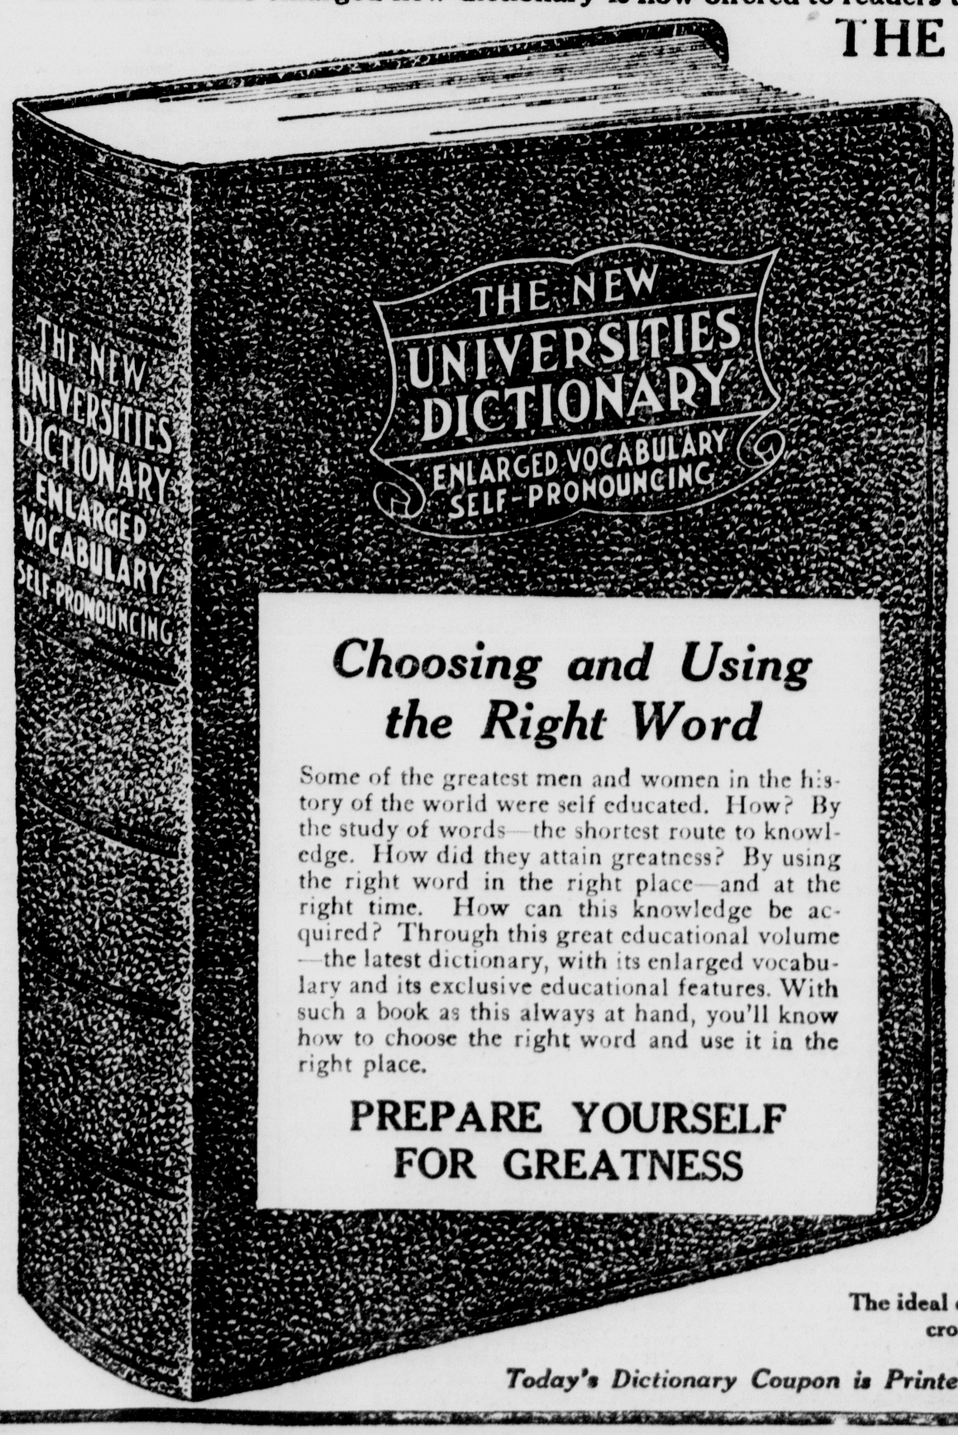

During those years we have passed through the age of great discoveries and inventions—all of which called for new words. Activities in science have brought their new words. Progress in every line of human endeavor has developed a need for new words. And now radio, aviation, and other inventions and discoveries, have been giving us more new words than we could comfortably take care of for the past year or two.

So you need a new dictionary to keep up with the times. But, when you go to buy one, ask when it was compiled. Find out if it really is new, or an ancient reprint. If it should happen to be a very old one with a few new words inserted and then reprinted with a recent date, it will not be worth the price, whatever it may be. It would be like buying a second-hand hat which was out of style years ago.

Fashions change in words and their meanings as they do in wearing apparel; and not to be familiar with the modern usage of words is like being a back number in the style of dress. You cannot afford to be known as one who is so far behind the times. Keep up with modern language through the dictionary that is newly compiled with an enlarged vocabulary.

And don't forget that it requires more than a new date to make an old dictionary modern.

REPORTS FROM STOCK MARKET

NEW YORK, March 4.—Further advances in prices of industrial stocks was halted by profit-taking in the early trading today. A number of active stocks were strong enough to move against the tide, particularly those in which there was short covering to be done. But selling pressure in the main bulk of industrial, equipment, motor and railroad stocks many of which had made an almost uninterrupted rise in the last ten days gradually forced prices down from one to three points.

The oils were sold quite heavily, while the railroad stocks held their ground. Occasional spurts in General Electric and other high priced industrial stocks helped to steady this section of the market, while new forward movements in United Alloy Steel, Ludlum Steel, North American, Utah Securities, Katy Common and Radio Corporation also improved the general tone of the industrial list.

Call money rates were posted at 4½ per cent; the grain markets opened reactionary and cotton was up about 15 points in the first hour.

All motor stocks were down and shipping, sugar and tobacco stocks reacted from the high levels of the first part of the week.

Dawes Takes Oath

marked the end of the sixty-eighth and the beginning of the sixty-ninth senate.

Senators-Elect Qualify.

Senators-elect, new and old, then marched to the well of the senate and were administered the oath by Dawes.

The senate chamber had been greatly transformed for the ceremonies. Replacing the easy arm chairs were stiff backed, cane-bottomed chairs placed upon every available spot of the floor.

The house was the first to arrive in the chamber for the ceremonies. A hush fell over the audience, which for hours ahead had waited in the galleries, when Carl Loeffler, deputy bookkeeper, appeared in the center door and announced:

"The speaker and members of the house of representatives."

Government Chiefs Present.

Members of the house filed in behind Speaker Gillette and took seats on the Democratic side of the aisles. Loeffler appeared again. This time he announced the "ambassadors extraordinary, ministers, plenipotentiary and charges d'affaires, of foreign countries."

Then followed President Coolidge's cabinet, the chief of staff, the chief of naval operations, the commandant of the marine corps and supreme court.

Coming direct from the vice president's room in the rear, Dawes was announced and took a seat on the rostrum beside Cummins.

The whisperings and animated buzzing died down suddenly. David S. Barry, sergeant-at-arms of the senate, appeared at the center door and announced:

"The chairman and members of the committee on arrangements and president-elect of the United States."

Distinguished Group in Galleries.

President Coolidge walked in slowly, going to a seat in front of the desk.

The assemblage arose and applauded.

A striking contrast to the sombre dress of those who occupied the floor was furnished by the bright garments of the hundreds of women who occupied the galleries. Red and lavender predominated in the color scheme of their dress.

The president and vice-president's galleries on the left of the chamber held a distinguished group, including the wives, family and friends of President Coolidge and Dawes. Also Will Hays, former postmaster-general, and George Harvey, former ambassador to Great Britain. Harvey frequently nooded to friends on the floor.

SENATE REJECTS WORLD COURT

WASHINGTON, Mar. 4.—The world court issue was flatly repudiated by the senate today when it voted to "table" a motion to consider a resolution providing for American adherence to the international tribunal.

The issue was raised by Senator King, (Democrat) of Utah, who offered a motion that the senate consider the adherence resolution in executive session. Senator Moses, Republican, of New Hampshire, irreconcilable leader, immediately moved to table King's motion and the senate overwhelmingly voted to do so. No record vote was taken.

This is the ninth county station, others being located at East Liverpool, Wellsville, Salem, Lisbon, East Palestine, Damascus, Hanoverton and Leetonia.

Dawes

demanding more than Germany could pay. Germany was mullish. The reparations controversy was at the root of the whole trouble. Secretary of State Hughes put forth a settlement feeler by proposing that American experts be sent abroad to determine how much Germany was capable of paying. It was a task that no European experts could perform because of the racial animosities and political hatreds that underlay the whole business.

The Hughes view ultimately prevailed and Dawes sent over as an unofficial expert to advise the Reparations Commission. He took with him Owen D. Young, one of the country's foremost economists, and a staff of assistants. The result was the Dawes Plan for settling the reparations dispute. It is now about eight months old and is functioning smoothly so far. Germany's obligations were scaled down to a point where she believed she could meet them; France withdrew her armies of occupation from German cities, and there was a general stabilization of conditions abroad.

No chronicle of Charles Gates Dawes' career could be complete without reference to the incident that gave him his nickname, "Hell an' Maria," which probably won for him more national renown overnight than he had secured in all of his other far-flung activities. It was the writer's good fortune to have been present and witness it.

"Hell an' Maria!"

The scene was a Congressional committee room; the time forenoon; the witness General Dawes.

A select committee of congress was engaged in investigating everything that came under the general heading of "War Frauds," and, specifically, was probing into charges that millions of dollars had been wasted in the purchase of war supplies, both here and abroad.

Serious charges had been made that the A. E. F. had been duped and bilked out of millions of dollars by unwise purchasing. It was said, among other things, that France had sold decrepit airplanes to the A. E. F. for ten times their value; that worn-out horses had been unloaded on the Americans at $400 a head—there were a thousand such charges, many of which were doubtless true, and some of which were untrue.

General Dawes had been the Chief Purchasing Agent for the A. E. F. He should know.

For some time the General answered questions put by congressmen who had fought the war from the trenches of Washington. He explained conditions, abroad, made excuses for this and that, and then he became impatient. His impatience gave way to choler and that to real, red-faced anger. He got up out of his chair.

"Hell an' Maria!" he shouted, "we weren't running a department store over there; we were trying to win a war. We had to have supplies, and, by God, we got them!"

Dominates Scene.

The whole atmosphere of the room changed in a twinkling. Before it has been the committee that dominated the assemblage. Now it was Dawes.

"What the hell did congress mean", he demanded, "going around 'pin-pricking' the victory won by American arms?

"We had a war on our hands," he told the committee; "We couldn't quibble and haggle around over the price of shells and beans when shells and beans were scarce, and we had to have them for the men whose existence depended on shells and beans"

He raged up and down the room waving his stubby pipe. The air was blue. Real, smokey oaths sputtered from him in a never-ending procession. It was "what in'ell' this and "damn" that, and 'by God." the other thing.

Congress should be ashamed of itself, he exploded. Here was the end of the greatest war of all time—a war brought to a successful conclusion by the heroism and suffering of Americans three thousand miles from home and supplies and Congress was "pin-pricking around" over what this had cost and what that had cost. It was a disgrace, by God! that's what it was.

"We were fighting a war and dodging shells. D'de think we were a lot of bookkeepers over there? D'ye think we had time to account for every damned cent we spent? D'ye think we had time to put it down in a book every time we sent a bag of coffee or a pound of meat into the lines?"

"Bawls Out" Cabinet.

The committee was taken somewhat off its feets. Several members attempted feeble expostulation that the Corporal was misunderstanding the purpose and scope of the investigation. But the General waved them down and went on. Some of the women spectators tittered and began nervous preparations to leave the room. But they changed their minds and stayed—and seemed to enjoy it.

The afternoon papers that day carried pretty complete accounts of what the General had said, and more editorials were written about it than any other incident of the session.

Overnight General Dawes became "Hell an' Maria" Dawes to the whole country. The picture of the General stamping up and down the committee room, shaking his fist and roaring "Hell an' Maria!" at Congressmen apparently tickled the American sense of humor. At any rate, General Dawes found himself almost famous and certainly nationally renowned over night. It is one of the oddities of American life that the General thus became a nation-wide figure through a little picturesque profanity rather than by his numerous achievements in the business, financial and musical world.

President Harding afterward made him Director of the Budget and his career as Director of that institution was marked by similar explosive, but always effective, profanity.

He "bawled out" Cabinet officers in public for slip-shod business methods of expenditure in their departments. He cracked the whip over bureau heads who drew $3,500 in salary and who were responsible for the expenditure of perhaps $35,000,000 in Government funds.

Investigate Dental Office Robbery in East Palestine

East Palestine police today are without clue to the identity of the culprits, who looted the dental offices of Dr. O. E. Stanton, in the Bott building, North Market street. Gold leaf and dental instruments, estimated to be worth several hundred dollars, were taken.

The dentist, who makes his home in Salem, discovered the theft when he returned to East Palestine Monday. The lock in the main office door had been jimmied.

The insurance company, with whom the dentist carried burglary insurance, has sent a detective to East Palestine to make an investigation.

SIDELIGHTS ON INAUGURAL

BY H. K. REYNOLDS

WASHINGTON, Mar. 4.—They had to put an extra leaf in the White House breakfast table this morning. There was quite a family party. Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge, of course, soon to drive a mile up Pennsylvania avenue to sign a four year lease on the old John Adams homestead on the Potomac. Then there was Col. John C. Coolidge of Plymouth, Vt. The president's father. Mrs. Almira Goodhue of Northampton, Mass., Mrs. Coolidge's mother. John Coolidge, the president's only son, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Stearns of Boston, and a few other intimate friends.

This was a proud day for Frank Stearns, the man who is credited with "discovering" Calvin Coolidge and pushing him along the hard road to political success and national eminence. Reports that the president was "off of" Stearns because he confirmed the "hobby horse" story were apparently discredited by the Bostonian's presence at the White House today.

It only took the president about a quarter of an hour to get through his inaugural address. He had promised a short one and it was. Perhaps he took a leaf out of the book of Wm. Henry Harrison, whose inaugural address occupied more than an hour in delivery despite a sleet storm which drove most of the inaugural crowd to cover and a warm fireside. William Henry stuck it out, however, went back to the executive mansion with a fever, went promptly to bed and died a month later.

John W. Davis didn't stay in town to see Coolidge inaugurated, although he was here yesterday to appear before the supreme court. "Aren't you going to stay, John?" a friend asked. "No", said the ex-Democratic candidate. "I wasn't invited."

Evidently William Jennings Bryan thought that he was not invited either, for he had not shown up at a late hour and his favorite hotel said he had made no reservation for the inaugural period. A Republican inauguration is wormwood and then some to W. J. B.

Of all the state governors in the Capital today—and there are more than a score of them—the most popular and the most sought after was Nellie Taylor Ross of Wyoming, the first woman state executive in the United States. Mrs. Ross is a guest of Senator and Mrs. John B. Kendrick of Wyoming.

General Dawes says he didn't know he had so many relatives. At least one third of his visitors at the Willard have been kin folks, all wanting good seats in the inaugural stand at the Capitol. The General ran out of tickets a long time ago, but he offered his best wishes and hoped they would get to see the parade.

All the orchestras in town are playing the General's 'Melody in A", this week and it will be rendered tonight at the inaugural ball at the Mayflower hotel. The vice president and Mrs. Dawes will represent the Coolidges at this affair. They will remain at the White House.

Everyone has his own idea about the size of the inaugural crowd this year. There are lots of strangers in town—probably forty-thousand or so—but the crowd is nothing like that record breaking throng which gathered here a dozen years ago for the first inauguration of Woodrow Wilson. It was estimated at something over a hundred thousand.

GUTZON BORGLUM IS INDICTED

DECATUR, Ga., March 4.—Gutzon Borglum, noted sculptor, today was indicted by the DeKalb county grand jury on three counts, charging him with malicious mischief and larceny from a house, following his destruction of working models for the Confederate memorial he had been carving on Stone Mountain, near here.

Only one of the offenses—that of larceny from a house—is a felony under Georgia law.

ble, damaging Diamond alley buildings, Fire Chief Bryan and Safety Director Anderson ordered that it be razed immediately. The sidewalk in front of the structure has been fenced off to prevent injury to pedestrians.

Work of clearing away the fire ruins is proceeding slowly owing to adverse weather conditions. As soon as the fire adjusters complete settlements, the work will be speeded up so that actual building operations may be started early in the spring.

The fire inquiry is practically closed. However, D. J. Connor Youngstown, and T. Hayes White, Toronto, deputy fire marshals, are still in the city.

Redecorate Store Room.

The Church of the Nazarene today vacated the old K. & M. dollar store room, Fifth street, which has been leased by Moyer Brothers pending the reconstruction of the Wasbutzky building. Painters and carpenters are now at work on the interior of the building, redecorating and building counters and shelving. The room will be ready for occupancy within ten days or two weeks.

The Nazarene church has transferred its revival campaign to the Anderson Methodist Episcopal church, West Ninth street, where services will be held every night this week and next week. Evangelist Ellis, of Bethany, Oklahoma, who is in charge of the campaign, will preach on "The Second Coming of Christ" tonight, the third of his series of sermons dealing with the book of Revelations.

mock, across the alley from the Pauley building, was scorched.

Bennett's car was insured, but Pauley carried no insurance on his garage, his loss being about $300 and that on the car about $1,200.

A three-room house occupied by Ray Rollins, Shadyside avenue, was destroyed early yesterday afternoon when it was fired by an overheated stove. The loss was covered by insurance.

The firemen were called to the home of Mrs Nora Ammon, Trentvale street, by a chimney fire about 11:30 o'clock this morning. There was no damage.

The body was sent on the noon train today to Pittsburgh where burial will be made.

with all the world and business prosperity at home.

Calm Review of Conditions.

His inaugural speech, short in keeping with the whole ceremony, was a calm, dispassionate review of existing conditions, delivered by a clam, dispassionate man.

He spoke of the need for American co-operation abroad, within the boundaries of non-involvement in Europe's petty politics prescribed by Washington. He spoke in favor of frequent international conferences to settle world problems. He endorsed again the world court and the settlement of justiciable questions by justiciable methods, but "we are determined," he said, "not to become involved in the political controversies of the old world."

"We believe," he said, "that we can best serve our country and most successfully discharge our obligation to humanity by continuing openly and candidly, intensely and scrupulously American. If we have any destiny it has been in that direction."

Deals With Twin Policies.

Turning with equal candor to domestic questions, Mr. Coolidge served blunt notice that under his leadership, a leadership conferred by a majority of 1,000,000 votes, the Republican party will be a disciplined party, and a party willing to accept responsibility for its acts.

With unmistakable meaning, he referred to the November election. Endorsed the expulsion from the party of those insurgents who declined to support the Republican candidates and the Republican platform and declared there is no place under the party banner for those unwilling to "assume sufficient responsibility and exhibit sufficient loyalty to co operate in support of the broad, general principles of the party platform.

The people, he said, turned thumbs down in November on meddling with the constitution and the courts, and on government ownership of railroads and utilities. Hence, he proclaimed, the country can look for none of this under his administration.

Mr. Coolidge dwelt vigorously with the twin policies of his administration —government economy and reduction of taxes.

Gala Occasion

While the ceremonies that inducted Mr. Coolidge into his high office today were the simplest in many decades, not even his orders and wishes could keep the occasion from being a gala one.

Once more historic old Pennsylvania avenue resounded to the clatter of cavalry, the rumble of artillery caissons and the measured tread of infantry on the march. And a new note was throwing into today's brief pageant by the lumbering, hissing presence of a battalion of tanks.

Seven thousand troops of all arms consituted the inaugural parade and the governors of nearly a score of states, north, south, east and west, participated in the march from the capitol to the White House, passing in review before its great portals and again give physical evidence of the solidarity of the American commonwealths.

The president's escort to the senate consisted of one troop of the third cavalry, one troop of mounted and an honor guard of eight G. A. R. veterans.

The troops formed in the vicinity of the capitol while the plaza ceremonies were in progress and at their conclusion and as soon as the president had left the head of the procession moved down the hill and broke into the broad expanse of the avenue.

Vast Crowd Present

On the west plaza afront the capitol a crowd of scores of thousands was assembled. From the east steps of the Capitol to the congressional library people were packed to sardine-tightness. Muffled in furs and overcoats the vast throng shifted restlessly while waiting for the president to emerge from the senate chamber.

The marine band resplendent in scarlet coats and much gold braid was placed directly beneath the president's stand. It played patriotic airs to assuage the restlessness of the throng.

Estimates of the number of people within range of the president's voice, carried afar through the loud speakers varied widely, but among the lowest was 100,000. From the president's stand 15 feet above the level it looked as though the throng would have filled the Yale bowl twice over.

Mrs. Dawes Wears Blue.

The proceedings were slightly delayed by the slowness of the distinguished guests to leave the senate chamber and get their seats out in the cold March sunshine. The aisles leading into the diplomatic and cabinet sections were choked with high hats and expensive furs.

A few minutes before 1 o'clock the members of the supreme court of the United States, led by Chief Justice Taft, walked down the center steps, raising the first scattering applause. Mrs. Coolidge in grey, and Mrs. Dawes, in blue, next appeared and the applause increased.

Immediately behind them came the president and vice president.

The band struck up "Hail to the Chief" and the military snapped to salute.

Delivers Address From Manuscript.

From this time on the proceedings moved with despatch.

While a breathless hush fell over the great assemblage there boomed the voice of Chief Justice Taft, clear as a bell.

"Do you solemnly swear to ——"

The President's "I do," could scarcely be heard.

He leaned forward slightly, kissed the open Bible—the same one which he used as a small boy in learning to read.

He pronounced the oath at 1:02 p. m.

Then without more ado, he turned, faced his audience and began his speech. His voice carried well to every section of the extensive concourse and he was accorded perfect attention.

He delivered his address from manuscript, bare headed and overcoated.

"LOLLIPOP," WITH ADA MAY WEEKS, PROVES BEST SHOW OF 1924-25 SEASON

Henry W. Savage's Musical Comedy Scores Big Hit Before Capacity Audience at Ceramic Theatre Here.

The season's best show!

This was the verdict of East Liverpool theatre-goers who taxed the capacity of the Ceramic theatre last night, when Henry W. Savage's latest musical comedy success, "Lollipop," was presented.

Dainty Ada May Weeks, who prefers the shorter name, Ada May, and is so listed in the program, captivated the audience by her singing, clever dancing and general attractiveness. She is a star in every sense of the term and from rise of the curtain in the first act until the finale in the third she was repeatedly encored, as were the members of the supporting company.

Because of the general excellence of the cast, comprising 60 persons, it would require too much space to refer to individuals other than Miss Weeks. But it suffices to say that East Liverpool has not witnessed a better musical comedy in the last five years. The catchy music, snappy dancing, excellent chorus, beautiful scenery—in fact, everything that makes a good show—was included in the production.

Manager William Tallman of the Ceramic made no mistake in booking "Lollipop."

Nation's Chieftain

less those who are elected under the same party designation are willing to assume sufficient responsibility and exhibit sufficient loyalty, so they can co-operate in support of the broad general principles of the party, the election is merely a mockery."

Clear Mandate.

Then, referring in the same indirect manner to La Follette's platform of a curb on the judiciary and government ownership, he said:

"This Administration has come into power with a very clear and definite mandate from the people.

"The expression of the popular will in favor of maintaining our constitutional guarantees was overwhelming and decisive. There was such a manifestation of faith in the integrity of the courts that we can consider that issue rejected for some time to come. Likewise the policy of public ownership of railroads and certain electric utilities met with unmistakable defeat."

The president chose to divide his brief address into two parts. He spoke first of America's relations to the rest of the world, and he declared that "we can best serve our own country and discharge our obligations to humanity by being openly and candidly, intensely and scrupulously American."

America's Duty.

It is America's duty, being strong, he declared, to set the world an example in moderation of armament, and, in the spirit of fair play and justice, to rest her cause before the world on arbitration and reason rather than force. He specifically endorsed the conference idea in settling international problems, and he hinted that conferences can be expected under his administration.

In conformity with this principle, he said, America should adhere to the World Court, as a practical exhibition of American willingness to subscribe to justiciable procedure in the settling of international disputes.

But, he declared, the United States can contribute most to the peace and security and stability of the world by "maintaining our position of political detachment and independence."

"This position," he said, should be be made more and more clear in our relations with all foreign countries. We are at peace with all of them. Our program is never to oppress, but always to assist.

"We have made great contributions to the settlement of contentious differences in both Europe and Asia. But there is a very definite point beyond which we cannot go. We can only help those who help themselves.

Home Problems.

From this dealing with international affairs on a broad, general plane, the president turned to home problems. These he dealt with in the same manner, stressing always the need for less taxes, more enforcement of existing laws and non-interference by the government with legitimate business.

The collection of more taxes than are absolutely required to run an orderly, efficient government, he said, was simply a "species of legalized larceny."

"The time is arriving," he declared, "when we can have further tax reduction, when we must have tax reform."

"The method of raising revenues ought not to impede business; it ought to encourage it. I am opposed to extremely high rates, because they produce little or no revenue, because they are bad for the country, and, finally, because they are wrong.

"We cannot finance the country, we cannot improve social conditions through any system of injustice, even if we attempt to inflict it on the rich.

Correct Course.

"The wise and correct course to follow in taxation and all other economic legislation is NOT to destroy those who have already secured success, but to create conditions under which everyone will have a better chance to be successful.

"The verdict of the country has been given on this question. We shall do well to heed it."

Turning from taxation to law enforcement. Mr. Collidge appealed to the nation for better observance of existing laws. While he did not mention specifically the prohibition laws, it was evident that he had these in mind.

HIGHLIGHTS OF CHIEF'S SPEECH

WASHINGTON, March 4—President Coolidge's brief inaugural address, one of the shortest on record, bristled with epigrams today.

Some of the more pungent follow:

"We can best serve our country and humanity by being Americans."

"If we expect others to rely on our fairness and justice we must show that we rely on fairness and justice."

"We can only help those who help themselves."

"With us a treaty of peace means peace, and a treaty of amity means amity."

"Our program is never to oppress, but always to assist."

"There is no salvation in a narrow and bicoted partisanship."

"Economy is idealism in its most practical form."

"The wisest and soundest method of solving our tax problem is through economy."

"The collection of any taxes not absolutely required is only a species of legalized larceny."

"Under this Republic the rewards of industry belong to those who earn them."

"This country believes in prosperity."

"The result of economic dissipation to a nation is always moral decay."

"Our problem is not to secure new advantages, but to maintain those which we already possess."

"In a Republic the first rule for the guidance of the citizen is obedience to law."

"While there may be those of high intelligence who violate the law at times the barbarian and the defective always violate it. Those who disregard the rule of society . . . are treading the way that leads back to the jungle."

The president terminated his brief address with a plea for toleration—"the fundamental precept of liberty."

"Here stands our country," he concluded, "an example of tranquility at home, a patron of tranquility abroad. Here stands its government, aware of its might, but obedient to its conscience.

"America seeks no earthly empire built on blood and force.

"No ambition, no temptation lures her to thought of foreign dominions. The legions which she sends forth are armed, not with the sword, but with the cross. The higher state to which she seeks the allegiance of all mankind is not of human but of divine origin.

"She cherishes no purpose save to merit the favor of Almighty God."

REPORTS FROM STOCK MARKET

NEW YORK, March 4.—Further advances in prices of industrial stocks was halted by profit-taking in the early trading today. A number of active stocks were strong enough to move against the tide, particularly those in which there was short covering to be done. But selling pressure in the main bulk of industrial, equipment, motor and railroad stocks many of which had made an almost uninterrupted rise in the last ten days gradually forced prices down from one to three points.

The oils were sold quite heavily, while the railroad stocks held their ground. Occasional spurts in General Electric and other high priced industrial stocks helped to steady this section of the market, while new forward movements in United Alloy Steel, Ludlum Steel, North American, Utah Securities, Katy Common and Radio Corporation also improved the general tone of the industrial list.

Call money rates were posted at 4½ per cent; the grain markets opened reactionary and cotton was up about 15 points in the first hour.

All motor stocks were down and shipping, sugar and tobacco stocks reacted from the high levels of the first part of the week.

Dawes Takes Oath

marked the end of the sixty-eighth and the beginning of the sixty-ninth senate.

Senators-Elect Qualify.

Senators-elect, new and old, then marched to the well of the senate and were administered the oath by Dawes.

The senate chamber had been greatly transformed for the ceremonies. Replacing the easy arm chairs were stiff backed, cane-bottomed chairs placed upon every available spot of the floor.

The house was the first to arrive in the chamber for the ceremonies. A hush fell over the audience, which for hours ahead had waited in the galleries, when Carl Loeffler, deputy bookkeeper, appeared in the center door and announced:

"The speaker and members of the house of representatives."

Government Chiefs Present.

Members of the house filed in behind Speaker Gillette and took seats on the Democratic side of the aisles. Loeffler appeared again. This time he announced the "ambassadors extraordinary, ministers, plenipotentiary and charges d'affaires, of foreign countries."

Then followed President Coolidge's cabinet, the chief of staff, the chief of naval operations, the commandant of the marine corps and supreme court.

Coming direct from the vice president's room in the rear, Dawes was announced and took a seat on the rostrum beside Cummins.

The whisperings and animated buzzing died down suddenly. David S. Barry, sergeant-at-arms of the senate, appeared at the center door and announced:

"The chairman and members of the committee on arrangements and president-elect of the United States."

Distinguished Group in Galleries.

President Coolidge walked in slowly, going to a seat in front of the desk.

The assemblage arose and applauded.

A striking contrast to the sombre dress of those who occupied the floor was furnished by the bright garments of the hundreds of women who occupied the galleries. Red and lavender predominated in the color scheme of their dress.

The president and vice-president's galleries on the left of the chamber held a distinguished group, including the wives, family and friends of President Coolidge and Dawes. Also Will Hays, former postmaster-general, and George Harvey, former ambassador to Great Britain. Harvey frequently nooded to friends on the floor.

SENATE REJECTS WORLD COURT

WASHINGTON, Mar. 4.—The world court issue was flatly repudiated by the senate today when it voted to "table" a motion to consider a resolution providing for American adherence to the international tribunal.

The issue was raised by Senator King, (Democrat) of Utah, who offered a motion that the senate consider the adherence resolution in executive session. Senator Moses, Republican, of New Hampshire, irreconcilable leader, immediately moved to table King's motion and the senate overwhelmingly voted to do so. No record vote was taken.

The board consisting of 13 members, three of whom are from East Liverpool, will meet in the city hall, Lisbon, Friday evening to elect officers.

Secretary E. M. Diehl announced that arrangements have been completed with the Salineville Motor club as the official automobile service station in that section of the county. This is the ninth county station, others being located at East Liverpool, Wellsville, Salem, Lisbon, East Palestine, Damascus, Hanoverton and Leetonia.

Dawes

demanding more than Germany could pay. Germany was mullish. The reparations controversy was at the root of the whole trouble. Secretary of State Hughes put forth a settlement feeler by proposing that American experts be sent abroad to determine how much Germany was capable of paying. It was a task that no European experts could perform because of the racial animosities and political hatreds that underlay the whole business.

The Hughes view ultimately prevailed and Dawes sent over as an unofficial expert to advise the Reparations Commission. He took with him Owen D. Young, one of the country's foremost economists, and a staff of assistants. The result was the Dawes Plan for settling the reparations dispute. It is now about eight months old and is functioning smoothly so far. Germany's obligations were scaled down to a point where she believed she could meet them; France withdrew her armies of occupation from German cities, and there was a general stabilization of conditions abroad.

No chronicle of Charles Gates Dawes' career could be complete without reference to the incident that gave him his nickname, "Hell an' Maria," which probably won for him more national renown overnight than he had secured in all of his other far-flung activities. It was the writer's good fortune to have been present and witness it.

"Hell An' Maria!"

The scene was a Congressional committee room; the time forenoon; the witness General Dawes.

A select committee of congress was engaged in investigating everything that came under the general heading of "War Frauds," and, specifically, was probing into charges that millions of dollars had been wasted in the purchase of war supplies, both here and abroad.

Serious charges had been made that the A. E. F. had been duped and bilked out of millions of dollars by unwise purchasing. It was said, among other things, that France had sold decrepit airplanes to the A. E. F. for ten times their value; that worn-out horses had been unloaded on the Americans at $400 a head—there were a thousand such charges, many of which were doubtless true, and some of which were untrue.

General Dawes had been the Chief Purchasing Agent for the A. E. F. He should know.

For some time the General answered questions put by congressmen who had fought the war from the trenches of Washington. He explained conditions, abroad, made excuses for this and that, and then he became impatient. His impatience gave way to choler and that to real, red-faced anger. He got up out of his chair.

"Hell an' Maria!" he shouted, "we weren't running a department store over there; we were trying to win a war. We had to have supplies, and, by God, we got them!"

Dominates Scene.

The whole atmosphere of the room changed in a twinkling. Before it has been the committee that dominated the assemblage. Now it was Dawes.

"What the hell did congress mean", he demanded, "going around 'pin-pricking' the victory won by American arms?

"We had a war on our hands," he told the committee; "We couldn't quibble and haggle around over the price of shells and beans when shells and beans were scarce, and we had to have them for the men whose existence depended on shells and beans".

He raged up and down the room waving his stubby pipe. The air was blue. Real, smokey oaths sputtered from him in a never-ending procession. It was "what in'ell' this and "damn" that, and "by God," the other thing.

Congress should be ashamed of itself, he exploded. Here was the end of the greatest war of all time—a war brought to a successful conclusion by the heroism and suffering of Americans three thousand miles from home and supplies and Congress was "pin-pricking around" over what this had cost and what that had cost. It was a disgrace, by God! that's what it was.

"We were fighting a war and dodging shells. D'de think we were a lot of bookkeepers over there? D'ye think we had time to account for every damned cent we spent? D'ye think we had time to put it down in a book every time we sent a bag of coffee or a pound of meat into the lines?"

"Bawls Out" Cabinet.

The committee was taken somewhat off its feets. Several members attempted feeble expostulation that the Corporal was misunderstanding the purpose and scope of the investigation. But the General waved them down and went on. Some of the women spectators tittered and began nervous preparations to leave the room. But they changed their minds and stayed—and seemed to enjoy it.

The afternoon papers that day carried pretty complete accounts of what the General had said, and more editorials were written about it than any other incident of the session.

Overnight General Dawes became "Hell an' Maria" Dawes to the whole country. The picture of the General stamping up and down the committee room, shaking his fist and roaring "Hell an' Maria!" at Congressmen apparently tickled the American sense of humor. At any rate, General Dawes found himself almost famous and certainly nationally renowned over night. It is one of the oddities of American life that the General thus became a nation-wide figure through a little picturesque profanity rather than by his numerous achievements in the business, financial and musical world.

President Harding afterward made him Director of the Budget and his career as Director of that institution was marked by similar explosive, but always effective, profanity.

He "bawled out" Cabinet officers in public for slip-shod business methods of expenditure in their departments. He cracked the whip over bureau heads who drew $3,500 in salary and who were responsible for the expenditure of perhaps $35,000,000 in Government funds.

Investigate Dental Office Robbery in East Palestine

East Palestine police today are without clue to the identity of the culprits, who looted the dental offices of Dr. O. E. Stanton, in the Bott building, North Market street. Gold leaf and dental instruments, estimated to be worth several hundred dollars, were taken.

The dentist, who makes his home in Salem, discovered the theft when he returned to East Palestine Monday. The lock in the main office door had been jimmied.

The insurance company, with whom the dentist carried burglary insurance, has sent a detective to East Palestine to make an investigation.

SIDELIGHTS ON INAUGURAL

BY H. K. REYNOLDS

WASHINGTON, Mar. 4.—They had to put an extra leaf in the White House breakfast table this morning. There was quite a family party. Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge, of course, soon to drive a mile up Pennsylvania avenue to sign a four year lease on the old John Adams homestead on the Potomac. Then there was Col. John C. Coolidge of Plymouth, Vt. The president's father. Mrs. Almira Goodhue of Northampton, Mass., Mrs. Coolidge's mother. John Coolidge, the president's only son, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Stearns of Boston, and a few other intimate friends.

This was a proud day for Frank Stearns, the man who is credited with "discovering" Calvin Coolidge and pushing him along the hard road to political success and national eminence. Reports that the president was "off of" Stearns because he confirmed the "hobby horse" story were apparently discredited by the Bostonian's presence at the White House today.

It only took the president about a quarter of an hour to get through his inaugural address. He had promised a short one and it was. Perhaps he took a leaf out of the book of Wm. Henry Harrison, whose inaugural address occupied more than an hour in delivery despite a sleet storm which drove most of the inaugural crowd to cover and a warm fireside. William Henry stuck it out, however, went back to the executive mansion with a fever, went promptly to bed and died a month later.

John W. Davis didn't stay in town to see Coolidge inaugurated, although he was here yesterday to appear before the supreme court. "Aren't you going to stay, John?" a friend asked. "No", said the ex-Democratic candidate. "I wasn't invited."

Evidently William Jennings Bryan thought that he was not invited either, for he had not shown up at a late hour and his favorite hotel said he had made no reservation for the inaugural period. A Republican inauguration is wormwood and then some to W. J. B.

Of all the state governors in the Capital today—and there are more than a score of them—the most popular and the most sought after was Nellie Taylor Ross of Wyoming, the first woman state executive in the United States. Mrs. Ross is a guest of Senator and Mrs. John B. Kendrick of Wyoming.

General Dawes says he didn't know he had so many relatives. At least one third of his visitors at the Willard have been kin folks, all wanting good seats in the inaugural stand at the Capitol. The General ran out of tickets a long time ago, but he offered his best wishes and hoped they would get to see the parade.

All the orchestras in town are playing the General's 'Melody in A", this week and it will be rendered tonight at the inaugural ball at the Mayflower hotel. The vice president and Mrs. Dawes will represent the Coolidges at this affair. They will remain at the White House.

Everyone has his own idea about the size of the inaugural crowd this year. There are lots of strangers in town—probably forty-thousand or so—but the crowd is nothing like that record breaking throng which gathered here a dozen years ago for the first inauguration of Woodrow Wilson. It was estimated at something over a hundred thousand.

GUTZON BORGLUM IS INDICTED

DECATUR, Ga., March 4.—Gutzon Borglum, noted sculptor, today was indicted by the DeKalb county grand jury on three counts, charging him with malicious mischief and larceny from a house, following his destruction of working models for the Confederate memorial he had been carving on Stone Mountain, near here.

Only one of the offenses—that of larceny from a house—is a felony under Georgia law.

ble, damaging Diamond alley buildings, Fire Chief Bryan and Safety Director Anderson ordered that it be razed immediately. The sidewalk in front of the structure has been fenced off to prevent injury to pedestrians.

Work of clearing away the fire ruins is proceeding slowly owing to adverse weather conditions. As soon as the fire adjusters complete settlements, the work will be speeded up so that actual building operations may be started early in the spring.

The fire inquiry is practically closed. However, D. J. Connor Youngstown, and T. Hayes White, Toronto, deputy fire marshals, are still in the city.

Redecorate Store Room.

The Church of the Nazarene today vacated the old K. & M. dollar store room, Fifth street, which has been leased by Moyer Brothers pending the reconstruction of the Wasbutzky building. Painters and carpenters are now at work on the interior of the building, redecorating and building counters and shelving. The room will be ready for occupancy within ten days or two weeks.

The Nazarene church has transferred its revival campaign to the Anderson Methodist Episcopal church, West Ninth street, where services will be held every night this week and next week. Evangelist Ellis, of Bethany, Oklahoma, who is in charge of the campaign, will preach on "The Second Coming of Christ" tonight, the third of his series of sermons dealing with the book of Revelations.

mock, across the alley from the Pauley building, was scorched.

Bennett's car was insured, but Pauley carried no insurance on his garage, his loss being about $300 and that on the car about $1,200.

A three-room house occupied by Ray Rollins, Shadyside avenue, was destroyed early yesterday afternoon when it was fired by an overheated stove. The loss was covered by insurance.

The firemen were called to the home of Mrs Nora Ammon, Trentvale street, by a chimney fire about 11:30 o'clock this morning. There was no damage.

DEATH ROLL

Mrs. Dorothy Ellslager

Mrs. Dorothy Ellslager, 74 years old, died yesterday afternoon in her home in Kountz avenue following a short illness of complications.

The body was sent on the noon train today to Pittsburgh where burial will be made.

White Infant

Funeral services for the infant child of Rev. and Mrs. George White, of Lincoln avenue, Wellsville, who died Monday, were held yesterday afternoon. Burial was made in Spring Hill cemetery.

with all the world and business prosperity at home.

Calm Review of Conditions.

His inaugural speech, short in keeping with the whole ceremony, was a calm, dispassionate review of existing conditions, delivered by a clam, dispassionate man.

He spoke of the need for American co-operation abroad, within the boundaries of non-involvement in Europe's petty politics prescribed by Washington. He spoke in favor of frequent international conferences to settle world problems. He endorsed again the world court and the settlement of justiciable questions by justiciable methods, but "we are determined," he said, "not to become involved in the political controversies of the old world."

"We believe," he said, "that we can best serve our country and most successfully discharge our obligation to humanity by continuing openly and candidly, intensely and scrupulously American. If we have any destiny it has been in that direction."

Deals With Twin Policies.

Turning with equal candor to domestic questions, Mr. Coolidge served blunt notice that under his leadership, a leadership conferred by a majority of 1,000,000 votes, the Republican party will be a disciplined party, and a party willing to accept responsibility for its acts.

With unmistakable meaning, he referred to the November election. Endorsed the expulsion from the party of those insurgents who declined to support the Republican candidates and the Republican platform and declared there is no place under the party banner for those unwilling to "assume sufficient responsibility and exhibit sufficient loyalty to co operate in support of the broad, general principles of the party platform.

The people, he said, turned thumbs down in November on meddling with the constitution and the courts, and on government ownership of railroads and utilities. Hence, he proclaimed, the country can look for none of this under his administration.

Mr. Coolidge dwelt vigorously with the twin policies of his administration —government economy and reduction of taxes.

Gala Occasion

While the ceremonies that inducted Mr. Coolidge into his high office today were the simplest in many decades, not even his orders and wishes could keep the occasion from being a gala one.

Once more historic old Pennsylvania avenue resounded to the clatter of cavalry, the rumble of artillery caissons and the measured tread of infantry on the march. And a new note was throwing into today's brief pageant by the lumbering, hissing presence of a battalion of tanks.

Seven thousand troops of all arms consituted the inaugural parade and the governors of nearly a score of states, north, south, east and west, participated in the march from the capitol to the White House, passing in review before its great portals and again give physical evidence of the solidarity of the American commonwealths.

The president's escort to the senate consisted of one troop of the third cavalry, one troop of mounted and an honor guard of eight G. A. R. veterans.

The troops formed in the vicinity of the capitol while the plaza ceremonies were in progress and at their conclusion and as soon as the president had left the head of the procession moved down the hill and broke into the broad expanse of the avenue.

Vast Crowd Present

On the west plaza afront the capitol a crowd of scores of thousands was assembled. From the east steps of the Capitol to the congressional library people were packed to sardine-tightness. Muffled in furs and overcoats the vast throng shifted restlessly while waiting for the president to emerge from the senate chamber.

The marine band resplendent in scarlet coats and much gold braid was placed directly beneath the president's stand. It played patriotic airs to assuage the restlessness of the throng.

Estimates of the number of people within range of the president's voice, carried afar through the loud speakers varied widely, but among the lowest was 100,000. From the president's stand 15 feet above the level it looked as though the throng would have filled the Yale bowl twice over.

Mrs. Dawes Wears Blue.

The proceedings were slightly delayed by the slowness of the distinguished guests to leave the senate chamber and get their seats out in the cold March sunshine. The aisles leading into the diplomatic and cabinet sections were choked with high hats and expensive furs.

A few minutes before 1 o'clock the members of the supreme court of the United States, led by Chief Justice Taft, walked down the center steps, raising the first scattering applause. Mrs. Coolidge in grey, and Mrs. Dawes, in blue, next appeared and the applause increased.

Immediately behind them came the president and vice president.

The band struck up "Hail to the Chief" and the military snapped to salute.

Delivers Address From Manuscript.

From this time on the proceedings moved with despatch.

While a breathless hush fell over the great assemblage there boomed the voice of Chief Justice Taft, clear as a bell.

"Do you solemnly swear to ——"

The President's "I do," could scarcely be heard.

He leaned forward slightly, kissed the open Bible—the same one which he used as a small boy in learning to read.

He pronounced the oath at 1:02 p. m.

Then without more ado, he turned, faced his audience and began his speech. His voice carried well to every section of the extensive concourse and he was accorded perfect attention.

He delivered his address from manuscript, bare headed and overcoated.

Henry W. Savage's Musical Comedy Scores Big Hit Before Capacity Audience at Ceramic Theatre Here.

The season's best show!

This was the verdict of East Liverpool theatre-goers who taxed the capacity of the Ceramic theatre last night, when Henry W. Savage's latest musical comedy success, "Lollipop," was presented.

Dainty Ada May Weeks, who prefers the shorter name, Ada May, and is so listed in the program, captivated the audience by her singing, clever dancing and general attractiveness. She is a star in every sense of the term and from rise of the curtain in the first act until the finale in the third she was repeatedly encored, as were the members of the supporting company.

Because of the general excellence of the cast, comprising 60 persons, it would require too much space to refer to individuals other than Miss Weeks. But it suffices to say that East Liverpool has not witnessed a better musical comedy in the last five years. The catchy music, snappy dancing, excellent chorus, beautiful scenery—in fact, everything that makes a good show—was included in the production.

Manager William Tallman of the Ceramic made no mistake in booking "Lollipop."

Nation's Chieftain

less those who are elected under the same party designation are willing to assume sufficient responsibility and exhibit sufficient loyalty, so they can co-operate in support of the broad general principles of the party, the election is merely a mockery."

Clear Mandate.

Then, referring in the same indirect manner to La Follette's platform of a curb on the judiciary and government ownership, he said:

"This Administration has come into power with a very clear and definite mandate from the people.

"The expression of the popular will in favor of maintaining our constitutional guarantees was overwhelming and decisive. There was such a manifestation of faith in the integrity of the courts that we can consider that issue rejected for some time to come. Likewise the policy of public ownership of railroads and certain electric utilities met with unmistakable defeat."

The president chose to divide his brief address into two parts. He spoke first of America's relations to the rest of the world, and he declared that "we can best serve our own country and discharge our obligations to humanity by being openly and candidly, intensely and scrupulously American."

America's Duty.

It is America's duty, being strong, he declared, to set the world an example in moderation of armament, and, in the spirit of fair play and justice, to rest her cause before the world on arbitration and reason rather than force. He specifically endorsed the conference idea in settling international problems, and he hinted that conferences can be expected under his administration.

In conformity with this principle, he said, America should adhere to the World Court, as a practical exhibition of American willingness to subscribe to justiciable procedure in the settling of international disputes.

But, he declared, the United States can contribute most to the peace and security and stability of the world by "maintaining our position of political detachment and independence."

"This position," he said, should be made more and more clear in our relations with all foreign countries. We are at peace with all of them. Our program is never to oppress, but always to assist.

"We have made great contributions to the settlement of contentious differences in both Europe and Asia. But there is a very definite point beyond which we cannot go. We can only help those who help themselves.

Home Problems.

From this dealing with international affairs on a broad, general plane, the president turned to home problems. These he dealt with in the same manner, stressing always the need for less taxes, more enforcement of existing laws and non-interference by the government with legitimate business.

The collection of more taxes than are absolutely required to run an orderly, efficient government, he said, was simply a "species of legalized larceny."

"The time is arriving," he declared, "when we can have further tax reduction, when we must have tax reform."

"The method of raising revenues ought not to impede business; it ought to encourage it. I am opposed to extremely high rates, because they produce little or no revenue, because they are bad for the country, and, finally, because they are wrong.

"We cannot finance the country, we cannot improve social conditions through any system of injustice, even if we attempt to inflict it on the rich.

Correct Course.

"The wise and correct course to follow in taxation and all other economic legislation is NOT to destroy those who have already secured success, but to create conditions under which everyone will have a better chance to be successful.

"The verdict of the country has been given on this question. We shall do well to heed it."

Turning from taxation to law enforcement. Mr. Collidge appealed to the nation for better observance of existing laws. While he did not mention specifically the prohibition laws, it was evident that he had these in mind.

"The first rule for the guidance of a citizen is obedience to law," he said.

Law Violators.

"While there may be those of high intelligence who violate the law at times, the barbarian and the defective always violate it. Those who disregard the rule of society . . . are treading the way that leads back to the jungle."

The president terminated his brief address with a plea for toleration—"the fundamental precept of liberty."

"Here stands our country," he concluded, "an example of tranquility at home, a patron of tranquility abroad. Here stands its government, aware of its might, but obedient to its conscience.

"America seeks no earthly empire built on blood and force.

"No ambition, no temptation lures her to thought of foreign dominions. The legions which she sends forth are armed, not with the sword, but with the cross. The higher state to which she seeks the allegiance of all mankind is not of human but of divine origin.

"She cherishes no purpose save to merit the favor of Almighty God."

HIGHLIGHTS OF CHIEF'S SPEECH

WASHINGTON, March 4—President Coolidge's brief inaugural address, one of the shortest on record, bristled with epigrams today.

Some of the more pungent follow:

"We can best serve our country and humanity by being Americans."

"If we expect others to rely on our fairness and justice we must show that we rely on fairness and justice."

"We can only help those who help themselves."

"With us a treaty of peace means peace, and a treaty of amity means amity."

"Our program is never to oppress, but always to assist."

"There is no salvation in a narrow and bicoted partisanship."

"Economy is idealism in its most practical form."

"The wisest and soundest method of solving our tax problem is through economy."

"The collection of any taxes not absolutely required is only a species of legalized larceny."

"Under this Republic the rewards of industry belong to those who earn them."

"This country believes in prosperity."

"The result of economic dissipation to a nation is always moral decay."

"Our problem is not to secure new advantages, but to maintain those which we already possess."

"In a Republic the first rule for the guidance of the citizen is obedience to law."

"While there may be those of high intelligence who violate the law at times the barbarian and the defective always violate it."

"The essence of a Republic is representative government."

"The fundamental precept of liberty is toleration."

HIGH PASSERS DROP CONTESTS

New Cumberland Floor Teams Capture Hard Fought Games.

Chester High school basketball teams dropped two games last night to the New Cumberland squads in games played at the county seat. The boys lost by a score of 25 to 21, while the girls were forced down to defeat by a score of 24 to 17.

Both games were stubbornly contested with the local teams making strong bids for victory. They were unable, however, to overcome the leads of their opponents and rivals for the county championship.

Pinney was high scorer for the local boys with five field goals. Campbell, Pinney and Williams were the other locals to score from the field. Tuttle and Myers were both forced out of the game on personal fouls and were replaced by Williams and Haskinson. Huff and Beaumont were the leading scorers for New Cumberland with the former landing five double deckers.

Miss Paisley starred for Chester girls with seven field goals and one foul. Miss McCoy made the other double marker for the locals. Miss Edmunds with seven goals and Miss Householder with four field goals carried off scoring honors for the winners.

NEW MAN IS CREATED FROM WORN-OUT BODY

Only Thirty Minutes Sleep a Day Insufficient for Proper Rest—Ka-di-ok Removed the Cause.

W. C. FORTNER,
Huntington, W. Va.

Thirty minutes sleep a day would be declared insufficient for any person to provide the needed rest for the body, but this is what W. C. Fortner, a hotel clerk of Huntington, W. Va., residing at the Third Street hotel, was up against. And it is no wonder that his body was almost completely worn out, that he had no appetite, did not feel like work at all. Accompanying all these distressing and painful conditions, to augment his illness, were indigestion, constipation, nervousness, headaches and dizzy spells, with occasional complaints from his kidneys and liver.

But he's all right now. He took Ka-di-ok. He informed the Ka-di-ok representative that after taking two bottles of Ka-di-ok, he feels more like working, sleeps like a log, and feels like a new man. He has no more indigestion, good appetite, nervousness has all left him, his kidneys and liver have cleared up and are acting fine, and, more wonderful than all, has gained 12 pounds weight in two weeks. He is now a booster for Ka-di-ok and recommends it to all his friends.

This is why Ka-di-ok has so many friends: Because it does the work claimed for it, and when the job is completed, there are no comebacks, the effects are lasting, and everybody's happy.

Ka-di-ok is sold and recommended in East Liverpool by Mathews Cut Rate Medicine Store, 129 W. 6th street.

More Athletics For Japanese Maids Is Urged by Heathens

TOKIO—Maids of Japan need more exercise, according to health experts. Statistics show that Japanese women are physically inferior to women of other countries, due chiefly to the fact that they do not indulge in regular forms of exercise nor participate to any great extent in sports. Accordingly a movement has been launched to interest Japanese school girls in running, jumping, swimming, gymnastics and other kinds of physical exercise in the hope of building up a more robust Japanese womanhood.

Charcoal Braziers Passing.

Prior to the war, the charcoal brazier in Paris was an institution. It was a common sight to see loungers at the cafes on the sidewalks toasting their shins before the charcoal embers while drinking hot grog. The advent of electric heaters has so changed the custom that this picturesque vendor of comfort is rapidly passing. The electric heaters are hung overhead and reflect the heat to the sidewalk.

HIGH PASSERS DROP CONTESTS

New Cumberland Floor Teams Capture Hard Fought Games.

Chester High school basketball teams dropped two games last night to the New Cumberland squads in games played at the county seat. The boys lost by a score of 25 to 21, while the girls were forced down to defeat by a score of 24 to 17.

Both games were stubbornly contested with the local teams making strong bids for victory. They were unable, however, to overcome the leads of their opponents and rivals for the county championship.

Pinney was high scorer for the local boys with five field goals. Campbell, Pinney and Williams were the other locals to score from the field. Tuttle and Myers were both forced out of the game on personal fouls and were replaced by Williams and Haskinson. Huff and Beaumont were the leading scorers for New Cumberland with the former landing five double deckers.

Miss Paisley starred for Chester girls with seven field goals and one foul. Miss McCoy made the other double marker for the locals. Miss Edmunds with seven goals and Miss Householder with four field goals carried off scoring honors for the winners.

Chester will play Irondale on the Rock Springs park floor Friday evening. The preliminary game will be between the Juniors and Seniors.

NEW MAN IS CREATED FROM WORN-OUT BODY

Only Thirty Minutes Sleep a Day Insufficient for Proper Rest—Ka-di-ok Removed the Cause.

W. C. FORTNER,
Huntington, W. Va.

Thirty minutes sleep a day would be declared insufficient for any person to provide the needed rest for the body, but this is what W. C. Fortner, a hotel clerk of Huntington, W. Va., residing at the Third Street hotel, was up against. And it is no wonder that his body was almost completely worn out, that he had no appetite, did not feel like work at all. Accompanying all these distressing and painful conditions, to augment his illness, were indigestion, constipation, nervousness, headaches and dizzy spells, with occasional complaints from his kidneys and liver.

But he's all right now. He took Ka-di-ok. He informed the Ka-di-ok representative that after taking two bottles of Ka-di-ok, he feels more like working, sleeps like a log, and feels like a new man. He has no more indigestion, good appetite, nervousness has all left him, his kidneys and liver have cleared up and are acting fine, and, more wonderful than all, has gained 12 pounds weight in two weeks. He is now a booster for Ka-di-ok and recommends it to all his friends.

This is why Ka-di-ok has so many friends: Because it does the work claimed for it, and when the job is completed, there are no comebacks, the effects are lasting, and everybody's happy.

Ka-di-ok is sold and recommended in East Liverpool by Mathews Cut Rate Medicine Store, 129 W. 6th street.

More Athletics For Japanese Maids Is Urged by Heathens

TOKIO—Maids of Japan need more exercise, according to health experts. Statistics show that Japanese women are physically inferior to women of other countries, due chiefly to the fact that they do not indulge in regular forms of exercise nor participate to any great extent in sports. Accordingly a movement has been launched to interest Japanese school girls in running, jumping, swimming, gymnastics and other kinds of physical exercise in the hope of building up a more robust Japanese womanhood.

Charcoal Braziers Passing.

Prior to the war, the charcoal brazier in Paris was an institution. It was a common sight to see loungers at the cafes on the sidewalks toasting their shins before the charcoal embers while drinking hot grog. The advent of electric heaters has so changed the custom that this picturesque vendor of comfort is rapidly passing. The electric heaters are hung overhead and reflect the heat to the sidewalk.

AWAIT DIVISION OF ROAD FUNDS

Highway Projects Held up Pending Word From Capital.

No time has been designated by the State Highway Department when the 1925-26 appropriation of state and federal road funds will be divided, the State Highway Department has advised the county commissioners.

It has been proposed by the commissioners that a conference be held with the director of the highway department regarding an appropriation of these funds for Columbiana county within the next month or so. There are a number of proposed road projects pending in this county on which nothing can be done until some advice is received from Columbus as to how much state and federal aid it is possible to obtain for the county.

Grandmother Knew

There Was Nothing So Good for Congestion and Colds as Mustard

But the old-fashioned mustard plaster burned and blistered while it acted. Get the relief and help that mustard plasters gave, without the plaster and without the blister.

Musterole does it. It is a clean, white ointment, made with oil of mustard. It is scientifically prepared, so that it works wonders.

Gently massage Musterole in with the finger-tips. See how quickly it brings relief—how speedily the pain disappears.

Try Musterole for sore throat, bronchitis, tonsillitis, croup, stiff neck, asthma, neuralgia, headache, congestion, pleurisy, rheumatism, lumbago, pains and aches of the back or joints, sprains, sore muscles, bruises, chilblains, frosted feet, colds of the chest (it may prevent pneumonia).

To Mothers: Musterole is now made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

BEWARE THE COUGH OR COLD THAT HANGS ON

Chronic coughs and persistent colds lead to serious lung trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with twofold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and kills the germ.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by the medical fraternity as the greatest healing agency for the treatment of chronic coughs and colds and other forms of throat and lung troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and destroys the germs that lead to consumption.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of chronic coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, catarrhal bronchitis and other forms of throat and lung diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or the flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold, no matter of how long standing, is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. Creomulsion Co., Atlanta, Ga. (Adv.)

In the meantime, and after the judgment, the property was sold, and now the court is asked to set aside this sale. The defendants reside in Perry township, and in the vicinity of Salem.

WHEN BACK HURTS FLUSH OUT KIDNEYS

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes, and lemon juice, combined with litha, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; can not injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

BEWARE THE COUGH OR COLD THAT HANGS ON

Chronic coughs and persistent colds lead to serious lung trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with twofold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and kills the germ.

Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and destroys the germs that lead to consumption.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of chronic coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, catarrhal bronchitis and other forms of throat and lung diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or the flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold, no matter of how long standing, is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. Creomulsion Co., Atlanta, Ga. (Adv.)

WHEN BACK HURTS FLUSH OUT KIDNEYS

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes, and lemon juice, combined with litha, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; can not injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

68TH CONGRESS PASSES AFTER STORMY CAREER

Uncovered Scandals; Two Cabinet Officers Forced Out.

INTERNAL FIGHTS

Clashed With Two Presidents During Sixteen Months.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The Sixty-eighth congress ended its meteoric career today, after sixteen months of turbulent politics.

Serving with two presidents of the United States and constantly at war with the White House, the Sixty-eighth congress wrote upon the pages of time a record replete with sensations. It unearthed the naval oil scandals, drove two Cabinet members into retirement and rode roughshod over the executives on virtually every great legislative issue.

It was a congress of warring factions of the late Warren G. Harding and later with those of Calvin Coolidge. It varied its program of warfare by occasional internal fights and clashes now and then between its own two branches.

This record resulted chiefly from a coalition between Democratic forces and a small group of Republican Insurgents in both branches who paid allegiance to Senator Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin. The coalition, gaining a majority through the Insurgent "balance of power," rode harshly over the administration's program when ever it desired and administered a successive series of defeats to both Harding and Coolidge policies.

Forced Inquiries.

By using their combined forces, soon after the congress met in December, 1923, the Democrats and Insurgents forced the most amazing series of governmental investigations ever attempted by a congress. The oil-lease scandal headed the list, but it also included an inquiry into the conduct of the department of Justice, the Internal Revenue Bureau, campaign slush funds, propaganda, the railroads and a half dozen other subjects. These investigations were conducted by senate committees, and for months the sensational revelations afforded the nation its principal topic of conversation.

The Presidential election intervened, and Congress adjourned early in June, 1924, to attend the political conventions. The scandals were one of the chief issues thrust into the following election and, to the surprise of Congress, played but little part in the result.

When the second session was convened in December, 1924, Congress switched a soft pedal on investigations, although in its closing hours a new flurry was experienced. This led to authorizing a series of investigations of government bureaus, but dealt with such commonplace subjects as cotton, gasoline, bread and electricity.

The oil-lease inquiry made Senator Thomas J. Walsh (D.,) of Montana, a national figure. It was Walsh who persisted in his investigation of the leases until it was revealed that Edward L. Doheny, California oil magnate, had loaned former Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall $100,000 just before the Elk Hills lease was effected. He also brought out the fact that Harry F. Sinclair, lessee of Teapot Dome, had taken Fall into his employ immediately after getting his lease.

These revelations produced such a public clamor that Congress authorized President Coolidge to employ special counsel to cancel the leases and recover the oil properties for the Government. Litigation to this end is still pending in the Federal courts.

Denby Forced Out.

The oil investigation, while having little permanent political effect, did have its immediate material results. It drove Secretary of the Navy Edwin J. Denby out of the cabinet. A resolution, demanding his resignation, was passed by the Senate in February, 1924, by a vote of 51 to 25. A week later Denby's resignation was announced by the President.

The Department of Justice investigation had a similar result in that it forced the resignation of Attorney-General Harry M. Daugherty. This investigation, incidentally grew out of the move to oust Denby, as a similar resolution was immediately sponsored, demanding Daugherty's resignation. When Administration leaders called for a hearing on charges of incompetency leveled at Daugherty, a committee of inquiry was authorized. This brought Senator Burton K. Wheeler (D.) of Montana, into the picture.

Wheeler conducted the investigation, and in the testimony that followed it was charged that officials of the department had been bribed by bootleggers and that Daugherty had played "favorites" in enforcing the law. At the height of these revelations President Coolidge called for Daugherty's resignation. It was given.

Subsequently a counter-attack was launched on Wheeler by men employed by the National Republican Committee. The charges were followed by Wheeler's indictment by a Federal Grand Jury in Montana and an independent investigation of charges by a special Senate committee. This committee, headed by Senator Borah (R.) of Idaho, completely exonerated Wheeler, and the Senate adopted the report by a vote of 56 to 5, but a new Attorney-General, Harlan F. Stone, went ahead with the case, which is still pending.

How Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets Revive Your Old Time Friendships with Mince Pie and Sausage.

Nothing more contributes to make a man sure of himself than to get back into his old time stride of fearless eating. He takes one or two Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. No gassiness, no sour risings, no indigestion whatever. He eats his goulash with relish. A wedge of mince pie hits the high spots of satisfaction. He plays with pork and beans and never a come back.

The reason for all this is the alkaline effect which these tablets give the stomach. Digestion is aided and thus instead of a souring mixture so often the effect after eating, the stomach is sweet, active and comfortable. Get a 60 cent box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at any drug store and then invite the old timers back to the table.

MANY HOUSEKEEPERS TOO ILL TO WORK

How Many Are Finding Relief from Weakness and Pain. Mrs. Brandenburg a Notable Case

MRS. EMIL O. BRANDENBURG
651 37TH STREET, MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN

Milwaukee, Wisconsin.—"I was in a badly run-down condition and I would get weak spells and terrible headaches. I felt so badly last year that I could not do any housecleaning. The minute I would lift or stoop it seemed as if I was going to fall to pieces. I told a neighbor how I felt and she said that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was surely the right thing for me. I took four bottles then and in the fall of the year I took three. I had been treated by a doctor, but he gave me an iron tonic and that did not help me. It seemed that the tonic did not have in it what the Vegetable Compound did. That gave me the strength and ambition I needed and I have gained in weight. This year before I started to clean house I got four bottles of the Vegetable Compound and am taking it right along. I tell all my friends about it and how much good it does me. They can notice it because I have gained in weight. I weigh 118 now and do all my work myself again."—Mrs. EMIL O. BRANDENBURG, 651 37th Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

It took all my pains away and I don't have any backache now. I do my own housework, take care of a few chickens and my garden, and have a little girl three years old to look out for. 68TH CONGRESS PASSES AFTER STORMY CAREER

Uncovered Scandals; Two Cabinet Officers Forced Out.

INTERNAL FIGHTS

Clashed With Two Presidents During Sixteen Months.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The Sixty-eighth congress ended its meteoric career today, after sixteen months of turbulent politics.

Serving with two presidents of the United States and constantly at war with the White House, the Sixty-eighth congress wrote upon the pages of time a record replete with sensations. It unearthed the naval oil scandals, drove two Cabinet members into retirement and rode roughshod over the executives on virtually every great legislative issue.

It was a congress of warring factions of the late Warren G. Harding and later with those of Calvin Coolidge. It varied its program of warfare by occasional internal fights and clashes now and then between its own two branches.

This record resulted chiefly from a coalition between Democratic forces and a small group of Republican Insurgents in both branches who paid allegiance to Senator Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin. The coalition, gaining a majority through the Insurgent "balance of power," rode harshly over the administration's program when ever it desired and administered a successive series of defeats to both Harding and Coolidge policies.

Forced Inquiries.

By using their combined forces, soon after the congress met in December, 1923, the Democrats and Insurgents forced the most amazing series of governmental investigations ever attempted by a congress. The oil-lease scandal headed the list, but it also included an inquiry into the conduct of the department of Justice, the Internal Revenue Bureau, campaign slush funds, propaganda, the railroads and a half dozen other subjects. These investigations were conducted by senate committees, and for months the sensational revelations afforded the nation its principal topic of conversation.

The Presidential election intervened, and Congress adjourned early in June, 1924, to attend the political conventions. The scandals were one of the chief issues thrust into the following election and, to the surprise of Congress, played but little part in the result.

When the second session was convened in December, 1924, Congress switched a soft pedal on investigations, although in its closing hours a new flurry was experienced. This led to authorizing a series of investigations of government bureaus, but dealt with such commonplace subjects as cotton, gasoline, bread and electricity.

The oil-lease inquiry made Senator Thomas J. Walsh (D.,) of Montana, a national figure. It was Walsh who persisted in his investigation of the leases until it was revealed that Edward L. Doheny, California oil magnate, had loaned former Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall $100,000 just before the Elk Hills lease was effected. He also brought out the fact that Harry F. Sinclair, lessee of Teapot Dome, had taken Fall into his employ immediately after getting his lease.

These revelations produced such a public clamor that Congress authorized President Coolidge to employ special counsel to cancel the leases and recover the oil properties for the Government. Litigation to this end is still pending in the Federal courts.

Denby Forced Out.

The oil investigation, while having little permanent political effect, did have its immediate material results. It drove Secretary of the Navy Edwin J. Denby out of the cabinet. A resolution, demanding his resignation, was passed by the Senate in February, 1924, by a vote of 51 to 25. A week later Denby's resignation was announced by the President.

The Department of Justice investigation had a similar result in that it forced the resignation of Attorney-General Harry M. Daugherty. This investigation, incidentally grew out of the move to oust Denby, as a similar resolution was immediately sponsored, demanding Daugherty's resignation. When Administration leaders called for a hearing on charges of incompetency leveled at Daugherty, a committee of inquiry was authorized. This brought Senator Burton K. Wheeler (D.) of Montana, into the picture.

Wheeler conducted the investigation, and in the testimony that followed it was charged that officials of the department had been bribed by bootleggers and that Daugherty had played "favorites" in enforcing the law. At the height of these revelations President Coolidge called for Daugherty's resignation. It was given.

Subsequently a counter-attack was launched on Wheeler by men employed by the National Republican Committee. The charges were followed by Wheeler's indictment by a Federal Grand Jury in Montana and an independent investigation of charges by a special Senate committee. This committee, headed by Senator Borah (R.) of Idaho, completely exonerated Wheeler, and the Senate adopted the report by a vote of 56 to 5, but a new Attorney-General, Harlan F. Stone, went ahead with the case, which is still pending.

THE DOUBLE HOUSE

By Elizabeth Dejeans

(Chapter VI—Continued.)

Elaine Dascome seemed to have returned to life with no very clear understanding of the past and with vague ideas as to the future. As a child, she had been very gentle and submissive, entirely biddable, until the tiny spot of irritation in her brain had aroused her to an irrational activity. It had given to her the exotic charm which had captured Dascome, and the wild irritability of her worst moments which had worked havoc in their lives. Now, she seemed to feel nothing acutely; she was simply a child of very moderate intelligence grown a little older; a clinging, affectionate child-woman, very pathetic in her complete trust an obedience; very like Mary Bliss deprived of haunting fear and with a somewhat vague memory restored. She seemed to regard Dascome much as, when she was a child, she had regarded her father—he would care for her always. The most pronounced thing about her was her delight in Clarice. she would listen by the hour to Clarice's tales of the studio. "When my face is well, I'll come and see you act," she told Clarice. Occasionally she had flashes of intelligence. Once she said to Dascome, "I'm only a little over forty, John, but in my body I feel the way I look. Even if my face is made to look better, I shall feel like an old woman, not as when you married me. I am so sorry."

"You're my dear little invalid wife, Elaine. Don't bother about me—think of that beautiful child you gave me. She'll have beautiful children some day. We'll be grandparents and have the right to feel old and experienced."

The nurse chanced to overhear this and she told another nurse. "I just went out and cried. They're p'tiful, those two. Why, he's only forty-three—young yet. She doesn't half realize, still she does more thinking that she's given credit for—poor little soul! And he's gone right down these last weeks—he'd better have a doctor for himself."

Clarice came to see Karesia often. From the freedom of her confidences, it was evident that she had no suspicion of Karesia's heartache. Clarice had begun to realize. "It is hard for father," she told Karesia sadly. "He is so gentle and kind to mother, but I can tell, his love died long ago—! mean the way a man loves a woman. He's sick with pity for her—all day long. He looks so ill. He's getting gray. I can see that everything's an effort to him—just his will keeps him going. I wonder sometimes, too, whether there isn't someone whom he loves and this has ended it all."

Rossiter spoke his mind very positively. "I tell you, Kara, it's too much for him. I'm sorry for her, but there is such a thing as common sense! She doesn't really need him—not the sacrifice he is making. If she freed him, let him marry you, she wouldn't miss him, so long as she had affectionate care. He's about the finest thing in the shape of a man I've ever known! My hope is that she'll grow intelligent enough to realize, and do the kind thing."

"I wouldn't stand for it!" Karesia exclaimed. "And he would never do it. Never! It would be forsaking his helpless wife!"

Karesia had grown pitifully white and agitated; Rossiter was afraid to tell her how alarmed he was about Dascome. He told her, "Ive talked business with Dascome a good deal lately. He's willing that Clarice should sign up with us. He advises her putting some of her money into our concern. I have been holding off with our big picture until she can give her time to it."

It was a relief to Karesia that Dascome could "talk business." Evidently Rossiter saw much of Clarice. They had not told her so, but she decided that they were engaged. Dascome would see to it that Clarice would be very valuable to Rossiter; not a wife to be lightly regarded; in reality, Randsome Rossiter's partner—a working partner.

Karesia herself could do no work; she had the numb feeling that she was waiting for an upheaval of some sort, some desperate distress that would drive her to her typewriter because it would be the only thing left in life. All these weeks and she had not heard Dascome's voice once—and he had not written to her! She understood; he was afraid he would go under, break; John Dascome was afraid of himself. He had said, "It's beyond me. You'll understand—and forgive me?"

WHO'S WHO

CAPTAIN WILLIAM BEEBE.

The Arcturus, a war-built wooden ship, Captain William Beebe commanding, which sailed from Tebo's basin, foot of Twenty-third street, Brooklyn, recently, is one of the strangest fishing expeditions ever known.

With a large equipment of traps, hooks, nets and dredges the Arcturus will visit the Sargasso sea, a vast floating continent of seaweed that lies between Cuba and Africa in the middle Atlantic ocean.

DR. WILLIAM BEEBE

Below the surface of the Sargasso sea are strange monsters, whose like, according to marine tradition, has never been seen on sea or land. The scientific explanation for this is that millions of fish are caught in the net of seaweed and their decaying carcasses serve as carrion for undersea life, varieties of which exist in no other spot on the globe.

These are queer phosporescent creatures that flash and glimmer in the shadowed depths. Some are said to be illuminated with red, yellow and green lights like a Staten Island ferryboat. Octopuses 100 feet in diameter, capable of dragging a small vessel under the water, are said to roam this region. In ancient times the place was dreaded by sailors as a supernatural and haunted spot.

It has never been thoroughly explored. The Arcturus will move slowly through the seaweed collecting specimens. The expedition is backed by the department of tropical research of the New York Zoological society. Marshal Field, Harrison Williams, Vincent Astor, Henry D. Whiten and other wealthy men are financing the undertaking.

Beebe was born at Brooklyn, N. Y., July 29, 1876. He took his B. S. degree at Columbia university in 1898. He is the author of numerous books on wild life.

The old lady came out of a half doze as the train approached a station. "Where are we, Bobby?" she asked.

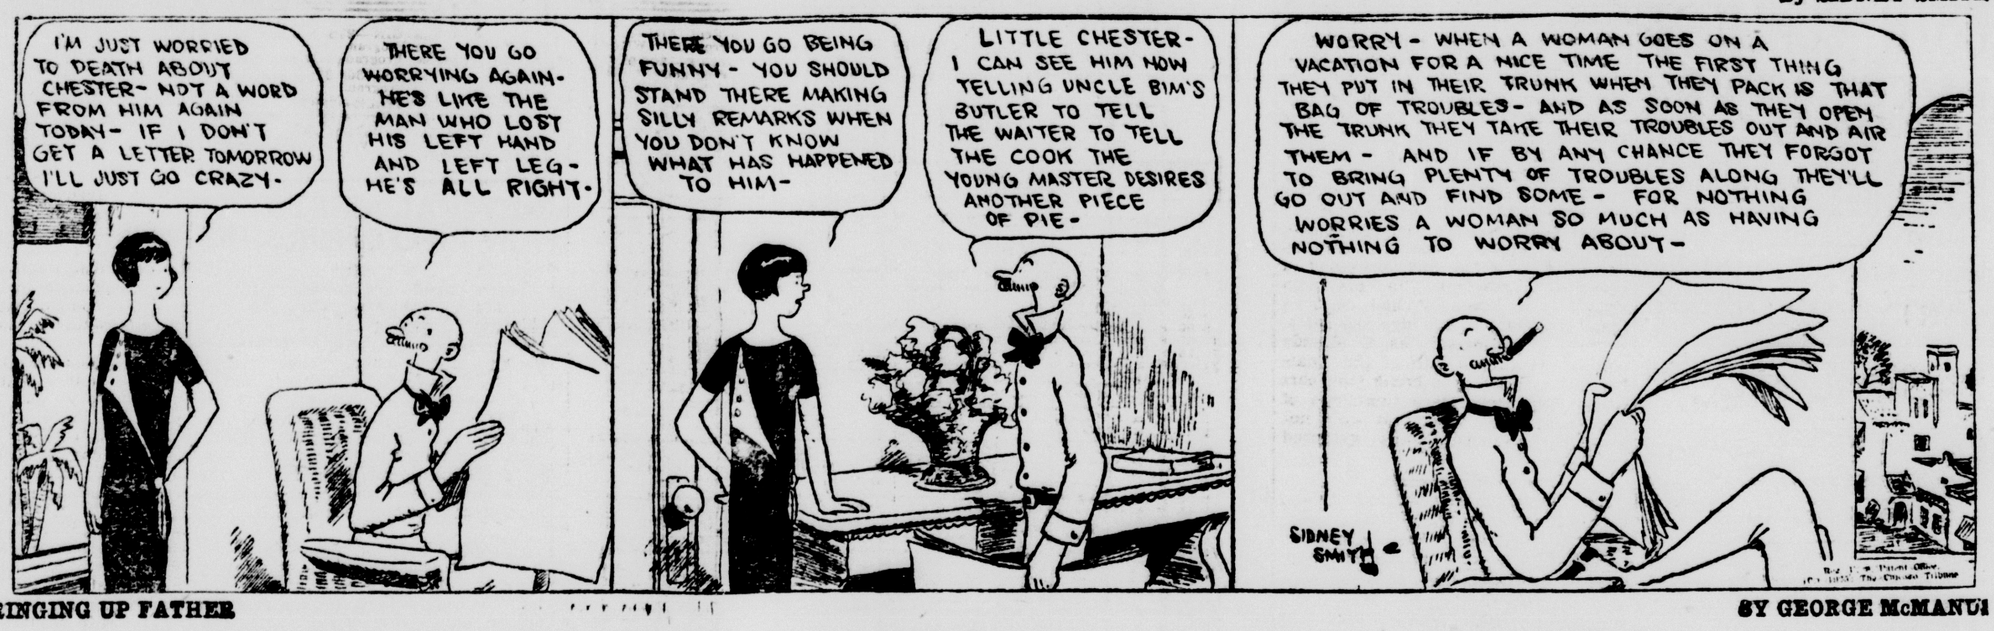

"I don't know, grandma."

"But didn't the conductor call out something just now?"

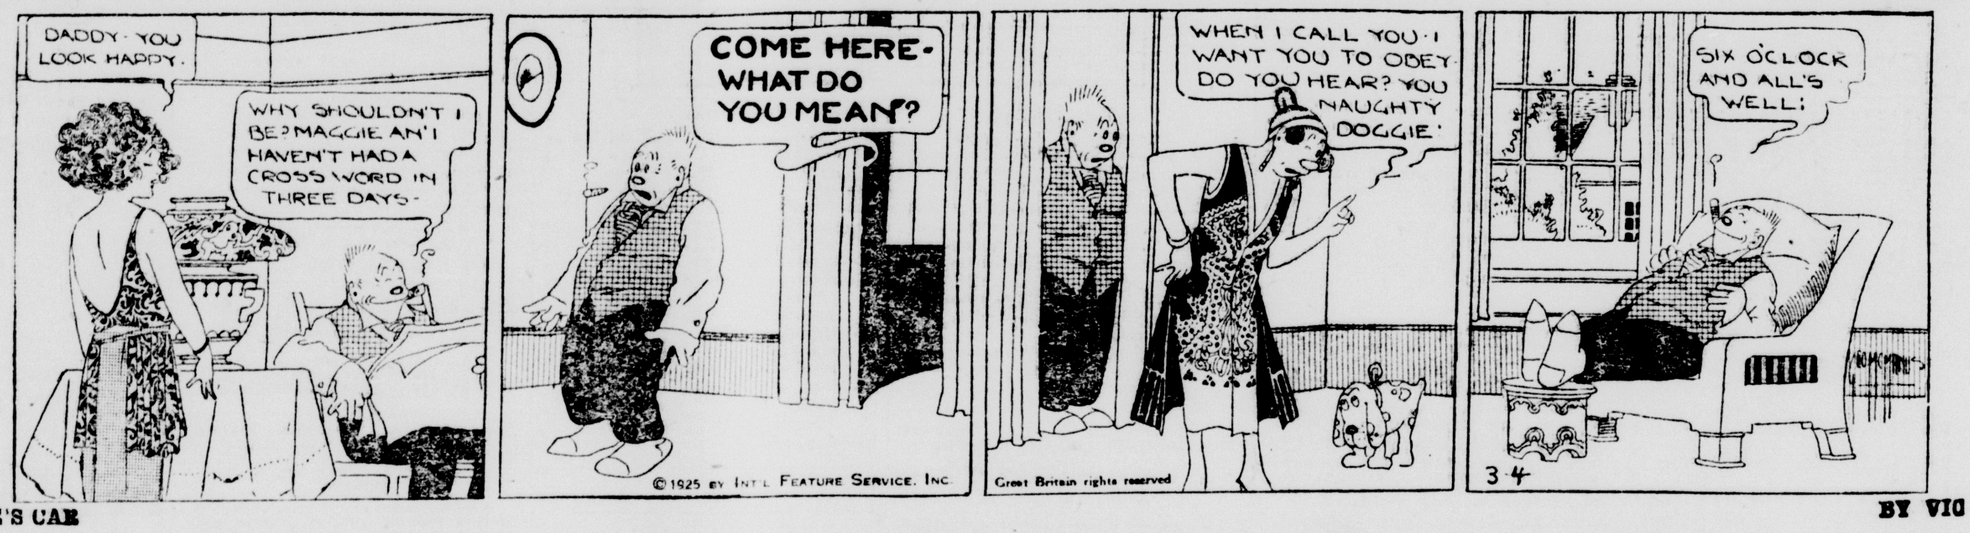

"No, grandma; he just stuck his head inside the door and sneezed."

"Bobby," she exclaimed, "quick, help me with these things! This is Oshkosh."

With a large equipment of traps, hooks, nets and dredges the Arcturus will visit the Sargasso sea, a vast floating continent of seaweed that lies between Cuba and African in the middle Atlantic ocean.

DR. WILLIAM BEEBE

Below the surface of the Sargasso sea are strange monsters, whose like, according to marine tradition, has never been seen on sea or land. The scientific explanation for this is that millions of fish are caught in the net of seaweed and their decaying carcasses serve as carrion for undersea life, varieties of which exist in no other spot on the globe.

These are queer phosporescent creatures that flash and glimmer in the shadowed depths. Some are said to be illuminated with red, yellow and green lights like a Staten Island ferryboat. Octopuses 100 feet in diameter, capable of dragging a small vessel under the water, are said to roam this region. In ancient times the place was dreaded by sailors as a supernatural and haunted spot.

It has never been thoroughly explored. The Arcturus will move slowly through the seaweed collecting specimens. The expedition is backed by the department of tropical research of the New York Zoological society. Marshal Field, Harrison Williams, Vincent Astor, Henry D. Whiten and other wealthy men are financing the undertaking.

Beebe was born at Brooklyn, N. Y., July 29, 1876. He took his B. S. degree at Columbia university in 1898. He is the author of numerous books on wild life.

The old lady came out of a half doze as the train approached a station. "Where are we, Bobby?" she asked.

"I don't know, grandma."

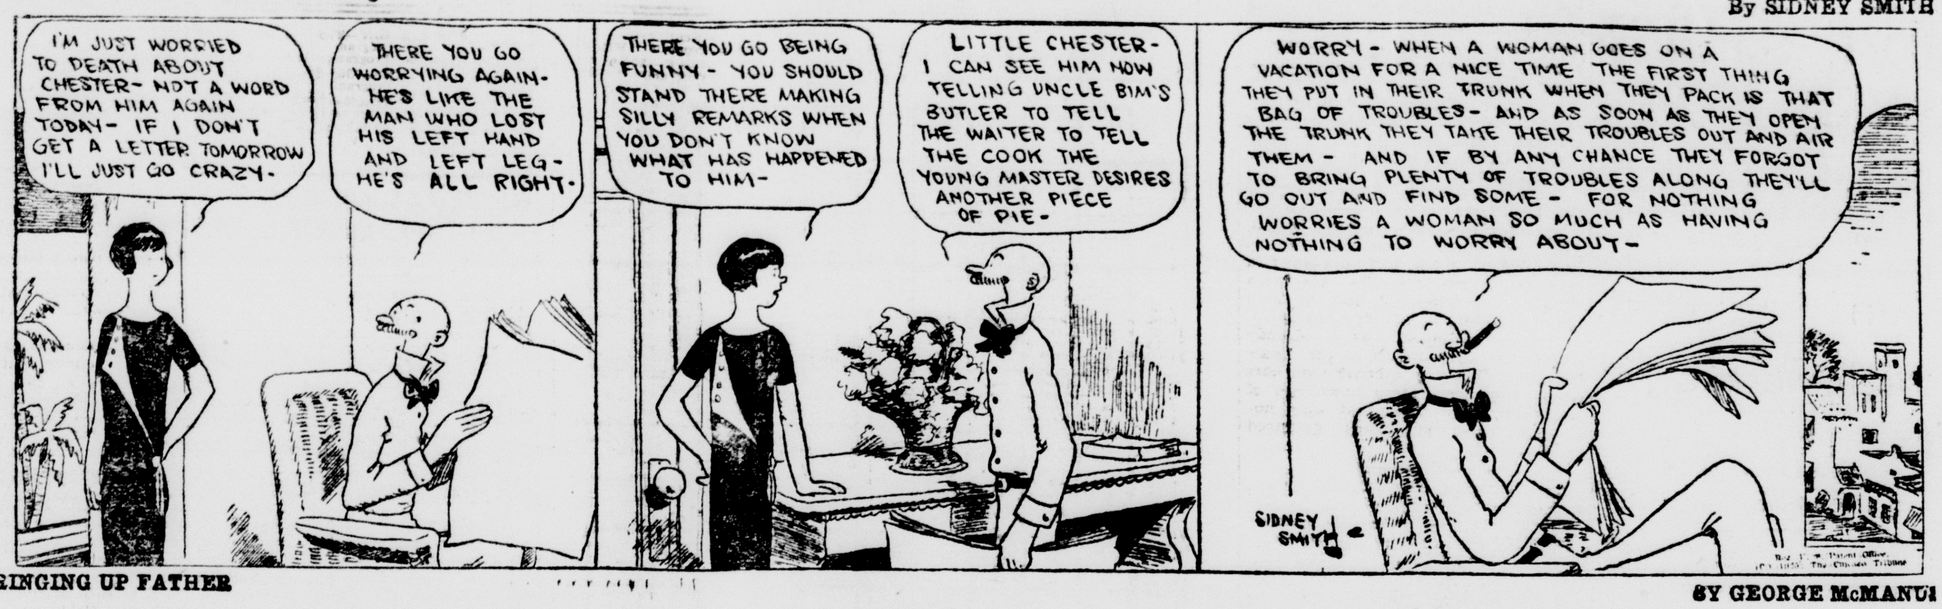

"But didn't the conductor call out something just now?"

"No, grandma; he just stuck his head inside the door and sneezed."

"Bobby," she exclaimed, "quick, help me with these things! This is Oshkosh."

PARTY'S LEADER

Inaugurated President "In His Own Right" Today.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Calvin Coolidge was inaugurated President of the United States "in his own right" today—and it is doubtful whether any incoming Executive in recent years ever began his tenure of office in circumstances that pointed more strongly to a peaceful and prosperous administration.

Undoubtedly the leader of his party, possessed of the confidence of the business interests of the country, and assured of a dependable working majority in the new congress that comes in with him, Calvin Coolidge lifted his right hand and took the oath today with no menacing clouds visible on his horizon, either at home or abroad.

Few of his predecessors have been so fortunate.

Twenty years ago today another President, who had been Vice-President, faced the same kind of a multitude in Capital Plaza. That was Roosevelt. He, too, had succeeded in becoming President "in his own right." But Roosevelt had no such auspicious start as Coolidge had today. Business was uneasy, as if already feeling the first breath of the financial storm that was to break two years later. And there were rumblings of party discontent, too, that were not lost upon the politicians gathered there.

Taft's Term.

Sixteen years ago this same day William H. Taft took the oath. The shadow of Roosevelt's leadership lay athwart Taft's inauguration. Ultimately that shadow grew and grew until at last it wreaked havoc with his administration and ultimately disrupted the Republican party.

Woodrow Wilson, in 1912, faced conditions not ideal. Politically the country was in turmoil over the Republican split. Business again was nervous over the policies that might be expected from the university professor who had become the first Democratic President in two decades. And too, he faced the task of translating an ambitious campaign program into legislative actuality.

The hint of the Great War that was to come was ever present that bleak, windy day that saw Wilson's second inaugural. There was more military display at that inauguration than had ever been seen before—more than has been seen since. The horizon was flecked with war clouds, black, ominous. Five weeks later they broke.

And only four years ago, when Warren G. Harding stepped resplendently forward, with upraised right hand, it was to face a volume of war reconstruction problems, mountainous in their extent and terrifying to a spirit less bold. The country was still at war, and there was political bitterness everywhere.

Calvin Coolidge confronted none of these conditions today.

Leads His Party.

Secure in his party leadership popular with the country and enjoying the confidence of business and industry to an extent that few of his predecessors have ever had this slight, reddish-haired New Englander began his new lease on the White House with every visible sign pointing to peace and prosperity.

At home business is humming. The farmer is getting back on his feet, stimulated by high priced wheat and corn. Money is easy. Unemployment is rare. The country, according to the bankers, has "turned the corner."

Abroad there are signs that Europe at last is emerging from that abyss of depression and turmoil in which she has labored since the war. The reparations controversy, which so harassed the Harding administration, has been adjusted—at least temporarily. The petty little wars that followed the armistice and retarded recovery have subsided.

There is today no controversy or problem in America's foreign relations that by any stretch of the imagination could lead to armed conflict.

This was Calvin Coolidge's heritage today, when he stepped into the White House "in his own right."

Perhaps it was because of all this that today's quadrennial show lacked some of the dramatic qualities of the others.

No Ostentation.

There was a decided lack of ostentation. No more parade than enough to lend dignity to the occasion; no "bleachers" lining the avenue; no "court of honor" in front of the White House; no pity for an outgoing President; no hotels filled with eager, whispering job seekers — President Coolidge weeks ago put his foot down on any ambitious program.

There is little of the dramatic in a President riding up Pennsylvania avenue by himself to be inaugurated. There was, it is true, a dramatic quality in Wilson's solitary passage through the famous thoroughfare, but Wilson himself was dramatic. Calvin Coolidge is not.

Most of the drama of today's historic spectacle is to be found in the biography of Calvin Coolidge—not in his lonely ride down the avenue to the great dome of the Capitol and the thousands beneath it.

Twenty-five years ago he was elected to his first public office. It was to the City Council of Northampton, Mass. He has never since then been out of public life, nor off the public payroll. He has traveled the road of public service from the deep valley to the mountain peak.

A year as Councilman, and then the rise—slow, gradual and non-spectacular. The City Solicitorship followed; then the clerkship court; then he went to the General Assembly; then to the State Senate, to the Lieutenant Governorship, to the Governor's mansion, to the Vice-Presidency, and then suddenly, whipped from the obscurity of that position by the whim of an inscrutable fate, elevated to the great office for which men have eaten their hearts out.

Congress is off Mr. Coolidge's hands for nine months. He has no intention of calling an extra session at which any new policies could be crystalized, unless something entirely unforseen arises between now and the regular convening time early in December.

Like Harding, he believes that the country in general and business in particular "want a rest from congress."

The Sixty-eighth congress, turbulent, insurgent, defiant, died with the old regime today. From the administration standpoint, it was the most unwept and unsung congress that ever expired. The new Sixty-ninth congress, elected on the crest of the Coolidge wave last November, will have a different atmosphere and a different attitude toward Coolidge.

Same Policies.

The continuance of the same policies and the same President, however, could not entirely do away with the impression of "a new administration."

For one thing, the country had a Vice President after being nineteen months without one.

General Charles G. Dawes will occupy a prominent position in the official life of Washington.

In the department there were some new faces. Charles Evans Hughes, who has gripped the foreign relations of the United States with a firmer grasp than any other Secretary of State in modern times, stepped out today as his successor, Frank B. Kellogg stepped in. That change may portend a marked difference in the conduct of American affairs abroad, but only time will tell.

There are those in Washington who predict an early recognition of Russia as a result of Hughe's retirement. His stern, unrelenting opposition has always stood in the way of it here to-fore. But they are in the minority.

Of the Cabinet which Coolidge inherited from Harding six members remain—Mellon, Weeks, Hoover, New, Work and Davis. The others are Mr. Coolidge's own appointees.

Meighan is Star In "Coming Through," Booked at Ceramic

Jack Bethea, author of "Bed Rock," the picturesque novel of the Alabama coal mines which Thomas Meighan has made into motion pictures under the title "Coming Through," was one of the most interested spectators of the thousands who watched the Meighan company at work on location at Birmingham, Ala., Bethea's home town.

The scenes were filmed at the same group of mines that inspired Mr. Bethea's story and the background, therefore, is as accurate as it is possible to conceive.

On several occasions Edward Sutherland, the director, called Mr. Bethea into consultation about details of the action, and once suggested to the author that he take the megaphone and direct a scene. Mr. Bethea was so surprised by the suggestion, having heard that authors had long been considered excess baggage around a motion picture production that he nearly fainted. Cold water was produced from a nearby stream, however, and he was quickly revived.

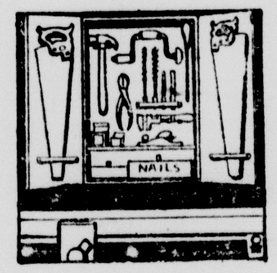

"Coming Through," adapted to the screen by Paul Schofield, features Lila Lee in the leading woman's role opposite the star. Wallace Beery is the villian. Others are Laurance Wheat, John Miltern, Frank Campeau, Gus Weinburg and Alice Knowland. "Coming Through," is the photoplay attraction at the Ceramic Theatre, commencing [illegible] Monday.

At one step, the new good Maxwell creates an immeasurably higher conception of the dollar's buying power in its relation to motor car speed and power.

The owner of this new good Maxwell finds in it an ability for sustained speed which wins his respect no matter how powerful the cars which he has driven before.

He becomes used to leading traffic in the city because of a flashing acceleration which is not surpassed by any car built today.

He finds himself enjoying these advantages at an operating and maintenance cost which owners declare is lower than any previous motor car experience has ever taught them to expect.

For the cause of this revolutionary achievement, credit the engineering genius which produced the Chrysler Six, the wonderful plants in which the new good Maxwell is manufactured from wheels to body, from radiator to rear axle.

In this new good Maxwell, Chrysler engineers and Maxwell's fine workmanship have advanced the ability of four cylinders beyond anything the industry had previously produced. We enthusiastically invite you to let us prove Maxwell's superior quality and value.

The New Good MAXWELL

NO CLOUD SEEN AS COOLIDGE TAKES REINS

Peace and Prosperity Loom as Chieftain is Sworn in.

PARTY'S LEADER

Inaugurated President "In His Own Right" Today.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Calvin Coolidge was inaugurated President of the United States "in his own right" today—and it is doubtful whether any incoming Executive in recent years ever began his tenure of office in circumstances that pointed more strongly to a peaceful and prosperous administration.

Undoubtedly the leader of his party, possessed of the confidence of the business interests of the country, and assured of a dependable working majority in the new congress that comes in with him, Calvin Coolidge lifted his right hand and took the oath today with no menacing clouds visible on his horizon, either at home or abroad.

Few of his predecessors have been so fortunate.

Twenty years ago today another President, who had beenVice-President, faced the same kind of a multitude in Capital Plaza. That was Roosevelt. He, too, had succeeded in becoming President "in his own right." But Roosevelt had no such auspicious start as Coolidge had today. Business was uneasy, as if already feeling the first breath of the financial storm that was to break two years later. And there were rumblings of party discontent, too, that were not lost upon the politicians gathered there.

Taft's Term.

Sixteen years ago this same day William H. Taft took the oath. The shadow of Roosevelt's leadership lay athwart Taft's inauguration. Ultimately that shadow grew and grew until at last it wreaked havoc with his administration and ultimately disrupted the Republican party.

Woodrow Wilson, in 1912, faced conditions not ideal. Politically the country was in turmoil over the Republican split. Business again was nervous over the policies that might be expected from the university professor who had become the first Democratic President in two decades. And too, he faced the task of translating an ambitious campaign program into legislative actuality.

The hint of the Great War that was to come was ever present that bleak, windy day that saw Wilson's second inaugural. There was more military display at that inauguration than had ever been seen before—more than has been seen since. The horizon was flecked with war clouds, black, ominous. Five weeks later they broke.

And only four years ago, when Warren G. Harding stepped resplendently forward, with upraised right hand, it was to face a volume of war reconstruction problems, mountainous in their extent and terrifying to a spirit less bold. The country was still at war, and there was political bitterness everywhere.

Calvin Coolidge confronted none of these conditions today.

Leads His Party.

Secure in his party leadership popular with the country and enjoying the confidence of business and industry to an extent that few of his predecessors have ever had this slight, reddish-haired New Englander began his new lease on the White House with every visible sign pointing to peace and prosperity.

At home business is humming. The farmer is getting back on his feet, stimulated by high priced wheat and corn. Money is easy. Unemployment is rare. The country, according to the bankers, has "turned the corner."

Abroad there are signs that Europe at last is emerging from that abyss of depression and turmoil in which she has labored since the war. The reparations controversy, which so harassed the Harding administration, has been adjusted—at least temporarily. The petty little wars that followed the armistice and retarded recovery have subsided.

There is today no controversy or problem in America's foreign relations that by any stretch of the imagination could lead to armed conflict.

This was Calvin Coolidge's heritage today, when he stepped into the White House "in his own right."

Perhaps it was because of all this that today's quadrennial show lacked some of the dramatic qualities of the others.

No Ostentation.

There was a decided lack of ostentation. No more parade than enough to lend dignity to the occasion; no "bleachers" lining the avenue; no "court of honor" in front of the White House; no pity for an outgoing President; no hotels filled with eager, whispering job seekers — President Coolidge weeks ago put his foot down on any ambitious program.

There is little of the dramatic in a President riding up Pennsylvania avenue by himself to be inaugurated. There was, it is true, a dramatic quality in Wilson's solitary passage through the famous thoroughfare, but Wilson himself was dramatic. Calvin Coolidge is not.

Most of the drama of today's historic spectacle is to be found in the biography of Calvin Coolidge—not in his lonely ride down the avenue to the great dome of the Capitol and the thousands beneath it.

Twenty-five years ago he was elected to his first public office. It was to the City Council of Northampton, Mass. He has never since then been out of public life, nor off the public payroll. He has traveled the road of public service from the deep valley to the mountain peak.

A year as Councilman, and then the rise—slow, gradual and non-spectacular. The City Solicitorship followed; then the clerkship of court; then he went to the General Assembly; then to the State Senate, to the Lieutenant Governorship, to the Governor's mansion, to the Vice-Presidency, and then suddenly, whipped from the obscurity of that position by the whim of an inscrutable fate, elevated to the great office for which men have eaten their hearts out.

Congress is off Mr. Coolidge's hands for nine months. He has no intention of calling an extra session at which any new policies could be crystalized, unless something entirely unforseen arises between now and the regular convening time early in December.

Like Harding, he believes that the country in general and business in particular "want a rest from congress."

The Sixty-eighth congress, turbulent, insurgent, defiant, died with the old regime today. From the administration standpoint, it was the most unwept and unsung congress that ever expired. The new Sixty-ninth congress, elected on the crest of the Coolidge wave last November, will have a different atmosphere and a different attitude toward Coolidge.

Same Policies.

The continuance of the same policies and the same President, however, could not entirely do away with the impression of "a new administration."

For one thing, the country had a Vice President after being nineteen months without one.

General Charles G. Dawes will occupy a prominent position in the official life of Washington.

In the department there were some new faces. Charles Evans Hughes, who has gripped the foreign relations of the United States with a firmer grasp than any other Secretary of State in modern times, stepped out today as his successor, Frank B. Kellogg stepped in. That change may portend a marked difference in the conduct of American affairs abroad, but only time will tell.

There are those in Washington who predict an early recognition of Russia as a result of Hughe's retirement. His stern, unrelenting opposition has always stood in the way of it here to-

The Best None Too Good

"After many years of stomach suffering I have at last found a medicine for that trouble. But believe me it was a timely find. I couldn't have lasted a great while longer. By stomach would bloat with gas like a barrel and the colics got to be awful. Medicine didn't help much until I got hold of Mayr's Wonderful Remedy, which did the trick. I am telling everyone about it." It is a simple, harmless preparation that removes the catarrhal mucous from the intestinal tract and allays the inflamation which causes practically all stomach, liver and intestinal ailments, including appendicitis. Meighan is Star In "Coming Through," Booked at Ceramic

Jack Bethea, author of "Bed Rock," the picturesque novel of the Alabama coal mines which Thomas Meighan has made into motion pictures under the title "Coming Through," was one of the most interested spectators of the thousands who watched the Meighan company at work on location at Birmingham, Ala., Bethea's home town.

The scenes were filmed at the same group of mines that inspired Mr. Bethea's story and the background, therefore, is as accurate as it is possible to conceive.

On several occasions Edward Sutherland, the director, called Mr. Bethea into consultation about details of the action, and once suggested to the author that he take the megaphone and direct a scene. Mr. Bethea was so surprised by the suggestion, having heard that authors had long been considered excess baggage around a motion picture production that he nearly fainted. Cold water was produced from a nearby stream, however, and he was quickly revived.

"Coming Through," adapted to the screen by Paul Schofield, features Lila Lee in the leading woman's role opposite the star. Wallace Beery is the villian. Others are Laurance Wheat, John Miltern, Frank Campeau, Gus Weinburg and Alice Knowland. "Coming Through," is the photoplay attraction at the Ceramic Theatre, commencing Wednesday.

At one step, the new good Maxwell creates an immeasurably higher conception of the dollar's buying power in its relation to motor car speed and power.

The owner of this new good Maxwell finds in it an ability for sustained speed which wins his respect no matter how powerful the cars which he has driven before.

He becomes used to leading traffic in the city because of a flashing acceleration which is not surpassed by any car built today.

He finds himself enjoying these advantages at an operating and maintenance cost which owners declare is lower than any previous motor car experience has ever taught them to expect.

For the cause of this revolutionary achievement, credit the engineering genius which produced the Chrysler Six, the wonderful plants in which the new good Maxwell is manufactured from wheels to body, from radiator to rear axle.

In this new good Maxwell, Chrysler engineers and Maxwell's fine workmanship have advanced the ability of four cylinders beyond anything the industry had previously produced. We enthusiastically invite you to let us prove Maxwell's superior quality and value.

The New Good MAXWELL

By Elizabeth Dejeans

Elaine Dascome seemed to have returned to life with no very clear understanding of the past and with vague ideas as to the future. As a child, she had been very gentle and submissive, entirely biddable, until the tiny spot of irritation in her brain had aroused her to an irrational activity. It had given to her the exotic charm which had captured Dascome, and the wild irritability of her worst moments which had worked havoc in their lives. Now, she seemed to feel nothing acutely; she was simply a child of very moderate intelligence grown a little older; a clinging, affectionate child-woman, very pathetic in her complete trust an obedience; very like Mary Bliss deprived of haunting fear and with a somewhat vague memory restored. She seemed to regard Dascome much as, when she was a child, she had regarded her father—he would care for her always. The most pronounced thing about her was her delight in Clarice. she would listen by the hour to Clarice's tales of the studio. "When my face is well, I'll come and see you act," she told Clarice. Occasionally she had flashes of intelligence. Once she said to Dascome, "I'm only a little over forty, John, but in my body I feel the way I look. Even if my face is made to look better, I shall feel like an old woman, not as when you married me. I am so sorry."

"You're my dear little invalid wife, Elaine. Don't bother about me—think of that beautiful child you gave me. She'll have beautiful children some day. We'll be grandparents and have the right to feel old and experienced."

The nurse chanced to overhear this and she told another nurse. "I just went out and cried. They're pitiful, those two. Why, he's only forty-three—young yet. She doesn't half realize, still she does more thinking that she's given credit for—poor little soul! And he's gone right down these last weeks—he'd better have a doctor for himself."

Clarice came to see Karesia often. From the freedom of her confidences, it was evident that she had no suspicion of Karesia's heartache. Clarice had begun to realize. "It is hard for father," she told Karesia sadly. "He is so gentle and kind to mother, but I can tell, his love died long ago—! mean the way a man loves a woman. He's sick with pity for her—all day long. He looks so ill. He's getting gray. I can see that everything's an effort to him—just his will keeps him going. I wonder sometimes, too, whether there isn't someone whom he loves and this has ended it all."

Rossiter spoke his mind very positively. "I tell you, Kara, it's too much for him. I'm sorry for her, but there is such a thing as common sense! She doesn't really need him—not the sacrifice he is making. If she freed him, let him marry you, she wouldn't miss him, so long as she had affectionate care. He's about the finest thing in the shape of a man I've ever known! My hope is that she'll grow intelligent enough to realize, and do the kind thing."

"I wouldn't stand for it!" Karesia exclaimed. "And he would never do it. Never! It would be forsaking his helpless wife!"

Karesia had grown pitifully white and agitated; Rossiter was afraid to tell her how alarmed he was about Dascome. He told her, "Ive talked business with Dascome a good deal lately. He's willing that Clarice should sign up with us. He advises her putting some of her money into our concern. I have been holding off with our big picture until she can give her time to it."

It was a relief to Karesia that Dascome could "talk business." Evidently Rossiter saw much of Clarice. They had not told her so, but she decided that they were engaged. Dascome would see to it that Clarice would be very valuable to Rossiter; not a wife to be lightly regarded; in reality, Randsome Rossiter's partner—a working partner.

Karesia herself could do no work; she had the numb feeling that she was waiting for an upheaval of some sort, some desperate distress that would drive her to her typewriter because it would be the only thing left in life. All these weeks and she had not heard Dascome's voice once—and he had not written to her! She understood; he was afraid he would go under, break; John Dascome was afraid of himself. He had said, "It's beyond me. You'll understand—and forgive me?"

WHO'S WHO

CAPTAIN WILLIAM BEEBE.

The Arcturus, a war-built wooden ship, Captain William Beebe commanding, which sailed from Tebo's basin, foot of Twenty-third street, Brooklyn, recently, is one of the strangest fishing expeditions ever known.

With a large equipment of traps, hooks, nets and dredges the Arcturus will visit the Sargasso sea, a vast floating continent of seaweed that lies between Cuba and Africa in the middle Atlantic ocean.

DR. WILLIAM BEEBE

Below the surface of the Sargasso sea are strange monsters, whose like, according to marine tradition, has never been seen on sea or land. The scientific explanation for this is that millions of fish are caught in the net of seaweed and their decaying carcasses serve as carrion for undersea life, varieties of which exist in no other spot on the globe.

These are queer phosporescent creatures that flash and glimmer in the shadowed depths. Some are said to be illuminated with red, yellow and green lights like a Staten Island ferryboat. Octopuses 100 feet in diameter, capable of dragging a small vessel under the water, are said to roam this region. In ancient times the place was dreaded by sailors as a supernatural and haunted spot.

It has never been thoroughly explored. The Arcturus will move slowly through the seaweed collecting specimens. The expedition is backed by the department of tropical research of the New York Zoological society. Marshal Field, Harrison Williams, Vincent Astor, Henry D. Whiten and other wealthy men are financing the undertaking.

Beebe was born at Brooklyn, N. Y., July 29, 1876. He took his B. S. degree at Columbia university in 1898. He is the author of numerous books on wild life.

The old lady came out of a half doze as the train approached a station. "Where are we, Bobby?" she asked.

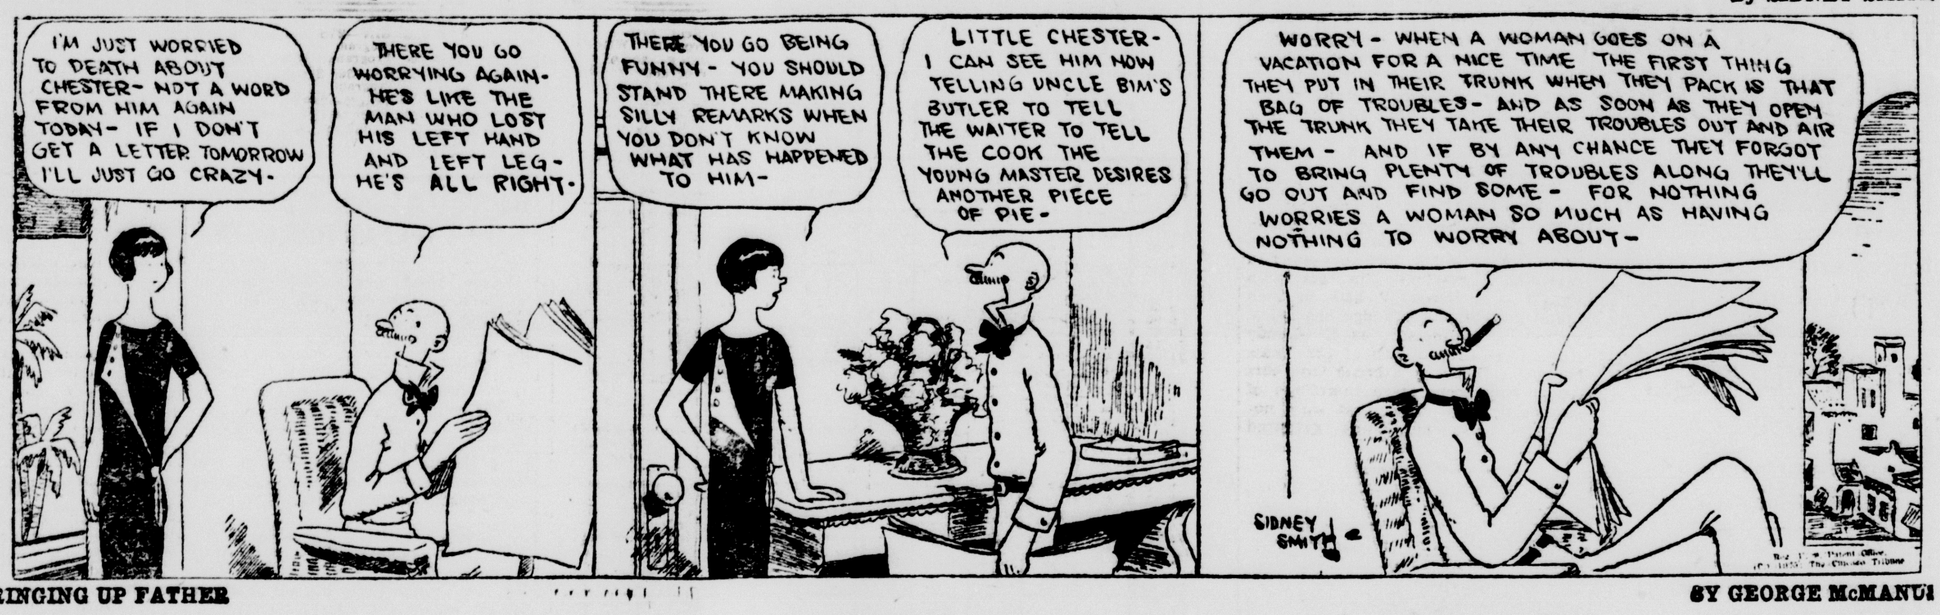

"I don't know, grandma."

"But didn't the conductor call out something just now?"

"No, grandma; he just stuck his head inside the door and sneezed."

"Bobby," she exclaimed, "quick, help me with these things! This is Oshkosh."

LOS ANGELES, Mar. 4.

WHAT will Bill Pickens think of next?

That is the question the writer asked himself after an afternoon of "automobile racing in your lap."

That is the way the picturesque Pickens describes it.

At Ascot, "the home of thrills," (Mr. Pickens again), not far from the heart of Los Angeles, is a track of only five eights of a mile, around which spin tiny racing machines in thrilling contests.

These machines are mainly cut-down Fords, "hopped up," as Pickens says, meaning that they are geared for as much speed as possible. About all there is to some of the machines is the engine and four wheels and a perch for the driver.

They look like so many different colored bugs as they go tearing around the little rack. You almost expect some of the dinky racing cars to fly to pieces.

Many of the drivers are mechanics from the numerous garages of the city who have built their own cars in their spare time. They drive as desperately as their famous brethren of the big speedways.

In fact it is said that quite a number of noted drivers have come to the big game of the motor racing world from Pickens' Lilliputian track.

It is easy for a man to get killed at Ascot in the toy races as in any of the big motor stakes, perhaps easier.

The dark shadows of the sable shore hover over the small machines a tevery turn of the brief rack. It is a dirt track, banked or tilted at the turns.

The midget machines hit that first turn in a huddle, sometimes as many as a dozen machines in the 'field." You hold your breath as they go belting around the turn, on a slant, and wonder afterwards why they haven't all been wrecked.

It is a mighty unsafe game. The writer in years of acquaintance has never known Bill Pickens to be promoting a really SAFE game.

Mr. Pickens has long been a purveyor to the public of spine-chilling thrills.

He is a fat, blond man, with a large pleasant face and a great gift of gab. His oily tongue has for many years been pouring carefully executed phrases in the ears of sports writers, city editors and others.

He was long manager of Barney Oldfield, the most famous racing driver the game has ever known. It wasn't always so much what Barney did as what Bill Pickens said he COULD do that accouned for much of his fame.

Of course there is no doubt Oldfield was a GREAT driver, surely the GREATEST of his day.

But it was Pickens who elaborated on Barney's skill at the wheel of a racing car to the extent that Oldfield known all over the world. If you are not familiar with the automobile racing game, and are asked to name some famous driver you immediately think of Oldfield.

That was Bill Pickens.

Such was Pickens' pertinacity in publicity when he managed Oldfield, he made the name Oldfield synonomous with auto racing, with great speed—with greater speed, in fact, than Oldfield or anybody else could ever get out of a motor car.

That was publicity genius.

After Oldfield retired the scope of motor racing didn't seem wide enough for Bill Pickens' genius for the time being.

He saw possibilities in the air—in aviation. That was dangerous. That possessed thrills which Pickens knows the public liked to enjoy, the element of great DANGER.

This thrill, boldly summed up, is the possibility of someone getting KILLED. It sounds cruel. Some may hotly deny that they were ever attracted to a dangerous stunt by this possibility.

But the fact that they were ever attracted to a dangerous stunt by this possibility.

But the fact remains, and you know it, that the possibility is always a strong attraction. Before automobile racing, before aviation, the bicycle riders "leaping the gap" were the big thrillers, before then the daring wire and trapeze performers and the lion tamers of the circus.

Down in Texas Bill Pickens discovered one Lieutenant Locklear, a flier who could stand on his head on the wings of his plane in air, and do other stunts on a flying machine.

Bill Pickens lavishly explointed Locklear's daring, made him a tremendous attraction at fairs and the like. The Texas flier made a small fortune, would have eventually become rich, Pickens says, but he got killed performing for a moving picture.

Now there are aviators who make Locklier's most astounding exploits seem quite simple. They all FOLLOWED Locklear, however. He was FIRST to demonstrate that seemingly impossible things could be done on an airplane.

Salineville High School Has Three Court Dates Open

Salineville high school has open basketball dates for the last three weeks of the season for both boys' and girls' teams, either at home or abroad, according to announcement today by Howard A. Knox, manager of athletics. The school will give a good guarantee, Knox asserts.

Mackey's Eye Finds Hoops For 11 Goals

Scores Five Fouls, Too, as M. P. Five Downs M. E.

Chalk up another victory for the First Methodist Protestant passers of the Sunday school circuit. Last night they sent the M. E. quintet down the road to defeat by the score of 37 to 31, in one of the best played league clashes of the season.

The M. P. Juniors also helped make it a big night by copping the preliminary, 31 to 28.

The main go was fast all the way, the Fifth street church lads depending on short passes up the floor for field goals while their foes took more chances on long shots, with Mackey as their mainstay on shot beneath the basket.

Mackey did a neat job, too, evading the defense for 11 field goals and five fouls. The M. E.'s had lost out before they found a way to stop Mackey. But while he was causing joy for the M. P. rooters, Cunningham, for the M. E. five, was keeping his team mates right on the heels of the leaders. He found the net for seven double deckers.

The M. E. lads got away to a two-point lead before the enemy found the basket. The Fifth streeters dropped behind on Todd's foul and Mackey's field goal. After this the M. P. squad stayed out in front most of the time. In crucial moments the M. P. outfit would depend upon Mackey to pull them through.

The winners led, 18 to 15, at the half. With six minutes to play in the final half, the M. E. five spurted to a six point lead, but Mackey got into action and the M. P.'s whittled away their foes' lead, finally landing in front. Weikart and Todd played well for the winners while Bromby and Nease put up classy games for the M. E. five.

The preliminary was close all the way, with the M. E. Juniors out in front for three quarters. In the final period, the M. P. youngsters forged ahead, with a half-minute to go, by one point. Bailey's field goal from the center of the court, cinched the contest. Bailey, Bettridge and Burke were the leading lights for the winners while Menge, Howard and Small starred for the M. E.

Liverpool Motors And E. M. Knowles Join Indoor Loop

E. M. Knowles and the Liverpool Motors are two new entries in the "Y" industrial indoor baseball circuit.

The Knowles and Motors teams formally became members of the circuit last night. There is room for two and possible three more teams, officials announced today.

Two games are scheduled for tonight. Potters and Babcock-Wilcox will clash at 7 o'clock. The Laughlin and Crockery City crews will follow them up.

Rigney, Erstwhile Regular, Trying to Stand Off Jack Tavenor at Shortstop, the Uncertain Post.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Mar. 4—After advising the youth of the nation about the several and sundry advantages of a western habitat, the late Horace Greeley probably concluded the interview with these few, well chosen words:

"Draw down to your hand, young man, draw down to your hand."

A young man with a shirt to his back, who didn't, was likely to find himself occupying the great open spaces as a bed chamber. Furthermore, he might still have the back but not the shirt. By that time it usually loved another.

Ty Cobb, the well known Major leaguer, probably never heard the parable of the young man and his fickle shirt. Of the thirty two active players on the Detroit roster at the moment, only nine were in the minor leagues last year. In brief, Tyrus is sitting behind three aces and expects to make them stand up. He virtually is standing pat while the rest of the boys are drawing plenty. This is one of several features which make the camp a rather unique institution. Another is embodied in a drastic rule that confines the manly athletes to two meals a day. A third feature the fact that not a ball was tossed here until Monday for the reason that no players were in camp. A fourth is the epidemic of buzzards which hover over the playing field.

I was going to make a nasty remark about buzzards always following the dead, but I won't. Anyhow, it is pretty generally admitted that the local variety of buzzards is inclined to be a bit neutrolic. Our Mr. Cobb, in fact, simply ignores them.

"No, no, I won't discuss the other teams," he said today in his quick, nervous way.

"I don't pick pennant races. I just try to develop ball clubs. I think I am justified in standing pat. We have only one position open.

"Ball players eat too much, except when they are working under me. Two meals are enough for any man in active training.

"As for our late start, I don't believe in an early one. That's a pretty good reason."

The open position is at shortstop, where Emory Rigney, regular for several seasons, is attempting to stand off Jack Tavenor, a bright, ambitious young man who is willing to start at the top and work up. Rigney lost caset with Cobb last year by some five-thumbed fielding at critical junctures. He now is running second to Tavenor—an undersized ball hawk who only hits over so often. This reflects the general tendency of the Detroit club away from hitting in favor of defense.

Travenor, up from Fort Worth, is one of the nine new men, the other eight are George Artus, semi-pro catcher from Paterson, N. J.; H. C. Carlisle, outfielder, from Charlotte, N. C.; Jesse Dayle, back again on the big time; Andy Harrington, semi-pro infielder; Bill Johnson, semi-pro pitcher from Newberry, Mich.; Bill Moore, pitcher from Rochester; Johnny Neunn, first baseman, from St. Paul; and John Walker, from Union, S. C.

Neunn and Carlisle are the only ones, aside from Tavenor, who have a white man's chance. Carlisle, scant 18-year-old and a gent who comports himself after the manner of Ken Williams, without the latter's generous feet, is supposed to take Cobb's job ultimately. He hit .346 for Charlotte last year, his first in professional baseball.

Neun will be kept around to understudy Blue at first base. The rest of the infield will be made up of Frank O'Rourke at second base, Tavenor, or Rigney at shortstop, and Bobby Jones at third base.

Cobb, Heilman, Fothergill, Manusch and Wingo will be the outfielders; Bassler and Woodall, the catchers.

The pitching staff will embrace Collins, Whitehill, Cole, Leonard, Dauss, Pillette, Sylvester, Johnson, Holloway, Stoner and Wells. It is the best by far the Tigers have mustered in many years. The last good one was the Donovan-Mullin-Killian-Willett - Summers combination of 1909. The Tigers won the pennant that year, this remark being offered for what it may be worth, if anything.

After Another Record.

NEW YORK, Mar. 4—Paavo Nurmi, the Finish record smasher, will continue his intensive runing campaign tonight when he will attempt to better the mark for the mile and one eighth distance in the indoor games at the 106th Armory in Brooklyn.

Willie Ritola, Carl Christiernsen, Swedish hurdling chompion, and Willie plant, American walking champion, also will compete in the games.

Barney Bricelin, Laughlin Manager, Ill in Hospital

Barney Bricelin, veteran semi-pro baseballer, and manager of the 1925 Newell Laughlin baseball club, is a patient in the East Liverpool City hospital.

Bricelin, it is said, is suffering from a nervous breakdown, although his condition is not believed to be critical.

Saturday Is Deadline For Duck Entries

District Tournament at Liberty Alleys to Start Monday.

"District duckpin bowlers—you have until 11 o'clock Saturday night to get into the lists for championship tournament play next week on the Liberty alleys."

This was the announcement today by Manager Steel, of the Liberty alleys, under whose direction the maples will fall on four days of the coming week as old champs and new contend for 1925 duck laurels.

Over 150 names have been placed on the entry list up to date. More are expected before Saturday night—the last chance.

Steele pointed out today that fees must be in the hands of the tournament directors by Saturday night, as well as entries.

The tournament will get under way at 6 o'clock on Monday night. Play for the night will suspend at 11 o'clock. A similar program will be maintained during Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

There will be matches in singles and doubles for each contender, with total pins to count.

Four alleys will be in operation throughout the tourney.

18.2 Realm Bows to New Champ Today

Jake Schaefer Sets Two World Records in Winning Crown.

CHICAGO, March 4.—The 18.2 balk line realm bowed to a new monarch today—"Young" Jake Schaefer who last night again wrested the crown from Willie Hoppe in the finale of the International Balkline tourney here. The score was 400 to 173 for eight innings.

In walking away with the honors, Schaefer set two new world's records, one for his high run of 400 in his match with Erich Hagenlacher and the other for his grand average of 57.14.

Behind him at the finish was Edouard Horemans, Belgium, with a grand average of 45.13 and a high run of 240. This gives Horemans the right to challenge the champion, although no championship match can be played before October at the earliest.

Hoppe finished in fourth place with a grand average of 26.69. His high run during the tourney was 197.

Hagenlacher finished third, having lost to Horemans in the afternoon match yesterday, 254 to 400 in 8 frames.

Texas Rangers, about whom much spicy and romantic as well as adventurous fiction has been written, and who have operated under a law more than ninety years old, have been declared unconstitutional. With a loss of salary facing the members, it is likely the organization will cease to function. A Texas ranger was reputed to be the only man single handed to unarm Pancho Villa.

TRAINING CAMP CHATTER

TAMPA, Fla., Mar. 4—With the announcement that Walter Johnson has signed a two-year contract, all doubt as to whether the famous pitcher would remain with the Washington Senators vanished and the team stepped out in the brisk morning air for a stiff workout. The salary figures in Johnson's contract were refused.

All of the Senators are here now but Gregg and he is on his way. All are said to be under contract but Reuther. Harris is putting his men through a half mile run each day, medicine ball play, and light batting and fielding practice.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 4—Talk was quite flagrant today of the Boston Braves making an eleventh hour trade for Lowery, second baseman of the Jersey City team.

The Braves are putting in some good batting and fielding practice each afternoon. Manager Bancroft is authority for the statement that the men are in better form now than during last year.

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 4.—Ty Cobb will not play baseball after this year and will manage the Tigers from the bench, the Georgian stated today.

"I will play less than 100 games this year," he said, "but I am not figuring on playing at all next season. It is time for me to quit. This year, if I am in shape, I will start the season, but later on I will have a man ready to take my place and then will take it easy."

Cobb believes now that he can be of greater value to the club as a bench manager than when he divides his time between managing the club and playing.

11 Contenders Are Out For Honors In New Concord Games

Winners Will be Sent to Columbus for Finals in State-wide Elimination Contests to Decide Buckeye School Champions; Two More Practice Sessions Scheduled for Locals.

East Liverpool high school basketeers will make their preliminary bid for a state-wide court fame on Friday and Saturday of this week at Muskingum college, New Concord, in the district scholastic tournament.

The district tourney is the first stage in the elimination process that decides annually the school team champions of the Bucyeye state. Tournaments of a similar nature will be held throughout Ohio.

The cream of tournament play will go to Columbus for the concluding and decisive contests from which will emerge a new band of school basketball kings.

Followers of the Blue and White want to see the Ceramic City aggregation in action at Columbus. Coach O. V. Boone, however, refuses to be overly optimistic.

The East Liverpool squad is scheduled to leave here on Thursday afternoon at 3:35. They will arrive that night in New Concord.

The team will be on hand in the New Concord gym at 9 o'clock Friday morning for the drawing. The first game of the tournament will start at 10 o'clock. The school teams will play throughout Friday and Saturday until the tourney winners are crowned.

There will be 11 teams in action, according to information received yesterday afternoon by Coach Boone. Although the names of the entries were not specified, it is likely that the list will include Zanesville, Cambridge, Coshocton, McConnellsville, East Liverpool, New Philadelphia, Marietta, and probably Wellsville, Steubenville and Bellaire.

The local squad will go through their paces this afternoon. On Thursday afternoon they have a short session prior to boarding a C. & P. train for Bridgeport.

Last Night's Fights

Stribling Wins.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Mar. 4—William "Young" Stribling, the Atlanta school boy, outpointed Dan O'Dowd, Boston lightheavyweight, here last night in ten rounds. After warming up slowly the young Georgian took the fight to his heavier opponent.

The suggested new race will be for yachts not exceeding 50 feet on the water line, and the course will be from Cowes to Plymouth.

Elementary Girls' Teams Are Formed

Play First Games March 23-24; Tournament March 26-27.

Grade school basketball activities, which were launched last week on the high school court, will not be solely for the boys. Girls will have their games, as well, according to announcement today by Athletic Director O. V. Boone, who outlines plans for competition among elementary school girls' teams.

A series of games will be played on March 23 and 24. The place has not been decided upon.

These games will be followed by a tournament on March 26 and 27. A silver loving cup will be given to the school winning the tourney.

A member of the high school girls' team will be assigned to each school to act in the capacity of coach.

Eligibility requirements, and admission prices will be the same as those governing boys' games

The girls have started practice sessions in the high school gymnasium, Central and McKinley drilled yesterday. The remainder of the practice schedule follows: Thursday, March 5, Horace-Mann, Neville and Garfield; Tuesday, March 10, Washington and Pleasant Heights; Thursday, March 12, Lincoln and Sixth street; Monday, March 23, Garfield and Horace-Mann, Neville, Washington and Lincoln; Tuesday, March 24, Pleasant Heights and Sixth street, Central and McKinley.

FOR TEN YEARS—DEPENDABLE

Exceptional dependability has been a characteristic of Dodge Brothers Motor Car since the day the first of these sturdy cars was marketed.

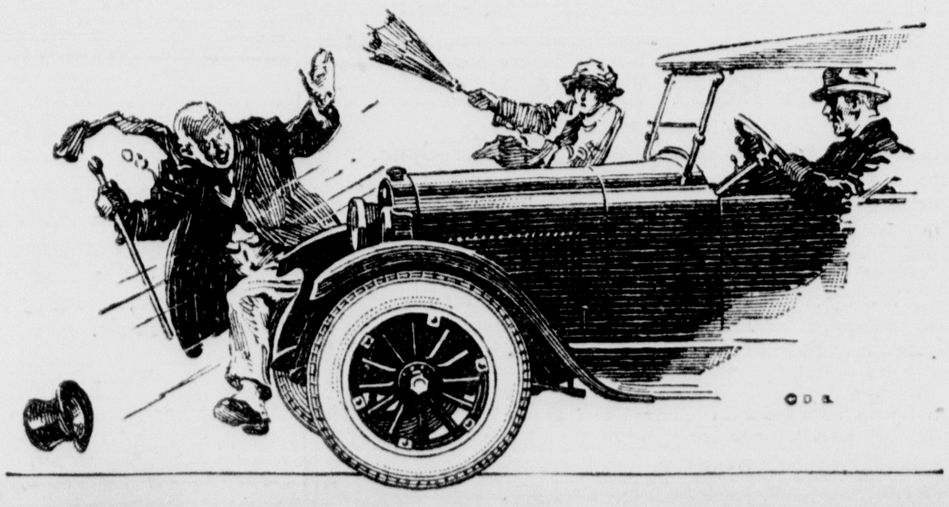

Not once in a decade has it failed to uphold and enhance its reputation for faithful performance.

The reason for its consistent goodness and continued betterment points directly back to the ideals of the founders.

Instead of fluctuating between an endless series of annual models, they determined to concentrate on the perfection of a single chassis.

Dodge Brothers Motor Car today is the embodiment of that ideal—an ideal that will endure as long as the institution itself.

PARTY'S LEADER

Inaugurated President "In His Own Right" Today.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Calvin Coolidge was inaugurated President of the United States "in his own right" today—and it is doubtful whether any incoming Executive in recent years ever began his tenure of office in circumstances that pointed more strongly to a peaceful and prosperous administration.

Undoubtedly the leader of his party, possessed of the confidence of the business interests of the country, and assured of a dependable working majority in the new congress that comes in with him, Calvin Coolidge lifted his right hand and took the oath today with no menacing clouds visible on his horizon, either at home or abroad.

Few of his predecessors have been so fortunate.

Twenty years ago today another President, who had beenVice-President, faced the same kind of a multitude in Capital Plaza. That was Roosevelt. He, too, had succeeded in becoming President "in his own right." But Roosevelt had no such auspicious start as Coolidge had today. Business was uneasy, as if already feeling the first breath of the financial storm that was to break two years later. And there were rumblings of party discontent, too, that were not lost upon the politicians gathered there.

Taft's Term.

Sixteen years ago this same day William H. Taft took the oath. The shadow of Roosevelt's leadership lay athwart Taft's inauguration. Ultimately that shadow grew and grew until at last it wreaked havoc with his administration and ultimately disrupted the Republican party.

Woodrow Wilson, in 1912, faced conditions not ideal. Politically the country was in turmoil over the Republican split. Business again was nervous over the policies that might be expected from the university professor who had become the first Democratic President in two decades. And too, he faced the task of translating an ambitious campaign program into legislative actuality.

The hint of the Great War that was to come was ever present that bleak, windy day that saw Wilson's second inaugural. There was more military display at that inauguration than had ever been seen before—more than has been seen since. The horizon was flecked with war clouds, black, ominous. Five weeks later they broke.

And only four years ago, when Warren G. Harding stepped resplendently forward, with upraised right hand, it was to face a volume of war reconstruction problems, mountainous in their extent and terrifying to a spirit less bold. The country was still at war, and there was political bitterness everywhere.

Calvin Coolidge confronted none of these conditions today.

Leads His Party.

Secure in his party leadership popular with the country and enjoying the confidence of business and industry to an extent that few of his predecessors have ever had this slight, reddish-haired New Englander began his new lease on the White House with every visible sign pointing to peace and prosperity.

At home business is humming. The farmer is getting back on his feet, stimulated by high priced wheat and corn. Money is easy. Unemployment is rare. The country, according to the bankers, has "turned the corner."

Abroad there are signs that Europe at last is emerging from that abyss of depression and turmoil in which she has labored since the war. The reparations controversy, which so harassed the Harding administration, has been adjusted—at least temporarily. The petty little wars that followed the armistice and retarded recovery have subsided.

There is today no controversy or problem in America's foreign relations that by any stretch of the imagination could lead to armed conflict.

This was Calvin Coolidge's heritage today, when he stepped into the White House "in his own right."

Perhaps it was because of all this that today's quadrennial show lacked some of the dramatic qualities of the others.

No Ostentation.

There was a decided lack of ostentation. No more parade than enough to lend dignity to the occasion; no "bleachers" lining the avenue; no "court of honor" in front of the White House; no pity for an outgoing President; no hotels filled with eager, whispering job seekers — President Coolidge weeks ago put his foot down on any ambitious program.

There is little of the dramatic in a President riding up Pennsylvania avenue by himself to be inaugurated. There was, it is true, a dramatic quality in Wilson's solitary passage through the famous thoroughfare, but Wilson himself was dramatic. Calvin Coolidge is not.

Most of the drama of today's historic spectacle is to be found in the biography of Calvin Coolidge—not in his lonely ride down the avenue to the great dome of the Capitol and the thousands beneath it.

Twenty-five years ago he was elected to his first public office. It was to the City Council of Northampton, Mass. He has never since then been out of public life, nor off the public payroll. He has traveled the road of public service from the deep valley to the mountain peak.

A year as Councilman, and then the rise—slow, gradual and non-spectacular. The City Solicitorship followed; then the clerkship court; then he went to the General Assembly; then to the State Senate, to the Lieutenant Governorship, to the Governor's mansion, to the Vice-Presidency, and then suddenly, whipped from the obscurity of that position by the whim of an inscrutable fate, elevated to the great office for which men have eaten their hearts out.

Congress is off Mr. Coolidge's hands for nine months. He has no intention of calling an extra session at which any new policies could be crystalized, unless something entirely unforseen arises between now and the regular convening time early in December.

Like Harding, he believes that the country in general and business in particular "want a rest from congress."

The Sixty-eighth congress, turbulent, insurgent, defiant, died with the old regime today. From the administration standpoint, it was the most unwept and unsung congress that ever expired. The new Sixty-ninth congress, elected on the crest of the Coolidge wave last November, will have a different atmosphere and a different attitude toward Coolidge.

Same Policies.

The continuance of the same policies and the same President, however, could not entirely do away with the impression of "a new administration."

For one thing, the country had a Vice President after being nineteen months without one.

General Charles G. Dawes will occupy a prominent position in the official life of Washington.

In the department there were some new faces. Charles Evans Hughes, who has gripped the foreign relations of the United States with a firmer grasp than any other Secretary of State in modern times, stepped out today as his successor, Frank B. Kellogg stepped in. That change may portend a marked difference in the conduct of American affairs abroad, but only time will tell.

There are those in Washington who predict an early recognition of Russia as a result of Hughe's retirement. His stern, unrelenting opposition has always stood in the way of it here to-fore. But they are in the minority.

Of the Cabinet which Coolidge inherited from Harding six members remain—McLon, Weeks, Hoover, New, Work and Davis. The others are Mr. Coolidge's own appointees.

Meighan is Star In "Coming Through," Booked at Ceramic

Jack Bethea, author of "Bed Rock," the picturesque novel of the Alabama coal mines which Thomas Meighan has made into motion pictures under the title "Coming Through," was one of the most interested spectators of the thousands who watched the Meighan company at work on location at Birmingham, Ala., Bethea's home town.

The scenes were filmed at the same group of mines that inspired Mr. Bethea's story and the background, therefore, is as accurate as it is possible to conceive.

On several occasions Edward Sutherland, the director, called Mr. Bethea into consultation about details of the action, and once suggested to the author that he take the megaphone and direct a scene. Mr. Bethea was so surprised by the suggestion, having heard that authors had long been considered excess baggage around a motion picture production that he nearly fainted. Cold water was produced from a nearby stream, however, and he was quickly revived.

"Coming Through," adapted to the screen by Paul Schofield, features Lila Lee in the leading woman's role opposite the star. Wallace Beery is the villian. Others are Laurance Wheat, John Miltern, Frank Campeau, Gus Weinburg and Alice Knowland. "Coming Through," is the photoplay attraction at the Ceramic Theatre, commencing Monday.

The Best None Too Good

"After many years of stomach suffering I have at last found a medicine for that trouble. But believe me it was a timely find. I couldn't have lasted a great while longer. By stomach would bloat with gas like a barrel and the colics got to be awful. Medicine didn't help much until I got hold of Mayr's Wonderful Remedy, which did the trick. I am telling everyone about it." It is a simple, harmless preparation that removes the catarrhal mucous from the intestinal tract and allays the inflamation which causes practically all stomach, liver and intestinal ailments, including appendicitis. At one step, the new good Maxwell creates an immeasurably higher conception of the dollar's buying power in its relation to motor car speed and power.

The owner of this new good Maxwell finds in it an ability for sustained speed which wins his respect no matter how powerful the cars which he has driven before.

He becomes used to leading traffic in the city because of a flashing acceleration which is not surpassed by any car built today.

He finds himself enjoying these advantages at an operating and maintenance cost which owners declare is lower than any previous motor car experience has ever taught them to expect.

For the cause of this revolutionary achievement, credit the engineering genius which produced the Chrysler Six, the wonderful plants in which the new good Maxwell is manufactured from wheels to body, from radiator to rear axle.

In this new good Maxwell, Chrysler engineers and Maxwell's fine workmanship have advanced the ability of four cylinders beyond anything the industry had previously produced. We enthusiastically invite you to let us prove Maxwell's superior quality and value.

Welter Champion Tosses Defi at Mexican Heavy

LOS ANGELES, March 4.—One of the strangest matches in the history of the ring was in the making here today.

Mickey Walker, welterweight champion, has challenged Tony Fuente, the Mexican heavyweight, who recently figured in a sensational knockout bout with Fred Fulton, the plasterer from Minnesota. Although Fuente weighs more than 210 pounds, Walker announced he was anxious to box the Mexican and was certain he could knock him out.

Team Championship Is Goal Sought in Miami Tournament

MIAMI, Fla., March 4.—Sixteen golf professionals, every one of them a champion in some section of the nation, and holding practically every title worthy of note held by a professional, today started their quest for the international team championship on the Miami Country club course.

For three days, an ever-narrowing field will battle in 36 hole best ball elimination rounds. Champions will fall by eights, then by fours and finally by twos until the holders of the crown, now worn jointly by MacDonald Smith and Billy Melhorn, are determined in the final 36 hole match play Friday.

It is the second match to start which will draw the bulk of the gallery. MacDonald Smith, who has been here for a week practicing, and Billy Melhorn, who has spent most of the winter at the course, the defending champions, will take on Gene Sarazen, and Leo Diegel, leaders in the Professional Golf league of Florida, and one of the teams most feared in the tourney.

Runyon Says

Pick Has New Thrills.
A Midget Motor Track.
Racing "In Your Lap."
The Author of Oldfield.
When He Had Locklear.

BY DAMON RUNYON.
Copyright, 1925, International Feature Service, Inc.

LOS ANGELES, Mar. 4.

WHAT will Bill Pickens think of next?

That is the question the writer asked himself after an afternoon of "automobile racing in your lap."

That is the way the picturesque Pickens describes it.

At Ascot, "the home of thrills," (Mr. Pickens again), not far from the heart of Los Angeles, is a track of only five eights of a mile, around which spin tiny racing machines in thrilling contests.

These machines are mainly cut-down Fords, "hopped up," as Pickens says, meaning that they are geared for as much speed as possible. About all there is to some of the machines is the engine and four wheels and a perch for the driver.

They look like so many different colored bugs as they go tearing around the little rack. You almost expect some of the dinky racing cars to fly to pieces.

Many of the drivers are mechanics from the numerous garages of the city who have built their own cars in their spare time. They drive as desperately as their famous brethren of the big speedways.

In fact it is said that quite a number of noted drivers have come to the big game of the motor racing world from Pickens' Lilliputian track.

It is easy for a man to get killed at Ascot in the toy races as in any of the big motor stakes, perhaps easier.

The dark shadows of the sable shore hover over the small machines a tevery turn of the brief rack. It is a dirt track, banked or tilted at the turns.

The midget machines hit that first turn in a huddle, sometimes as many as a dozen machines in the "field." You hold your breath as they go belting around the turn, on a slant, and wonder afterwards why they haven't all been wrecked.

It is a mighty unsafe game. The writer in years of acquaintance has never known Bill Pickens to be promoting a really SAFE game.

Mr. Pickens has long been a purveyor to the public of spine-chilling thrills.

He is a fat, blond man, with a large pleasant face and a great gift of gab. His oily tongue has for many years been pouring carefully executed phrases in the ears of sports writers, city editors and others.

He was long manager of Barney Oldfield, the most famous racing driver the game has ever known. It wasn't always so much what Barney did as what Bill Pickens said he COULD do that accouned for much of his fame.

Of course there is no doubt Oldfield was a GREAT driver, surely the GREATEST of his day.

But it was Pickens who elaborated on Barney's skill at the wheel of a racing car to the extent that Oldfield known all over the world. If you are not familiar with the automobile racing game, and are asked to name some famous driver you immediately think of Oldfield.

That was Bill Pickens.

Such was Pickens' pertinacity in publicity when he managed Oldfield, he made the name Oldfield synonomous with auto racing, with great speed—with greater speed, in fact, than Oldfield or anybody else could ever get out of a motor car.

That was publicity genius.

After Oldfield retired the scope of motor racing didn't seem wide enough for Bill Pickens' genius for the time being.

He saw possibilities in the air—in aviation. That was dangerous. That possessed thrills which Pickens knows the public liked to enjoy, the element of great DANGER.

This thrill, boldly summed up, is the possibility of someone getting KILLED. It sounds cruel. Some may hotly deny that they were ever attracted to a dangerous stunt by this possibility.

But the fact that they were ever attracted to a dangerous stunt by this possibility.

But the fact remains, and you know it, that the possibility is always a strong attraction. Before automobile racing, before aviation, the bicycle riders "leaping the gap" were the big thrillers, before then the daring wire and trapeze performers and the lion tamers of the circus.

Down in Texas Bill Pickens discovered one Lieutenant Locklear, a flier who could stand on his head on the wings of his plane in air, and do other stunts on a flying machine.

Bill Pickens lavishly explointed Locklear's daring, made him a tremendous attraction at fairs and the like. The Texas flier made a small fortune, would have eventually become rich, Pickens says, but he got killed performing for a moving picture.

Now there are aviators who make Locklier's most astounding exploits seem quite simple. They all FOLLOWED Locklear, however. He was FIRST to demonstrate that seemingly impossible things could be done on an airplane.

Mackey's Eye Finds Hoops For 11 Goals

Scores Five Fouls, Too, as M. P. Five Downs M. E.

Chalk up another victory for the First Methodist Protestant passers of the Sunday school circuit. Last night they sent the M. E. quintet down the road to defeat by the score of 37 to 31, in one of the best played league clashes of the season.

The M. P. Juniors also helped make it a big night by copping the preliminary, 31 to 28.

The main go was fast all the way, the Fifth street church lads depending on short passes up the floor for field goals while their foes took more chances on long shots, with Mackey as their mainstay on shot beneath the basket.

Mackey did a neat job, too, evading the defense for 11 field goals and five fouls. The M. E.'s had lost out before they found a way to stop Mackey. But while he was causing joy for the M. P. rooters, Cunningham, for the M. E. five, was keeping his team mates right on the heels of the leaders. He found the net for seven double deckers.

The M. E. lads got away to a two-point lead before the enemy found the basket. The Fifth streeters dropped behind on Todd's foul and Mackey's field goal. After this the M. P. squad stayed out in front most of the time. In crucial moments the M. P. outfit would depend upon Mackey to pull them through.

The winners led, 18 to 15, at the half. With six minutes to play in the final half, the M. E. five spurted to a six point lead, but Mackey got into action and the M. P.'s whittled away their foes' lead, finally landing in front. Weikart and Todd played well for the winners while Bromby and Nease put up classy games for the M. E. five.

The preliminary was close all the way, with the M. E. Juniors out in front for three quarters. In the final period, the M. P. youngsters forged ahead, with a half-minute to go, by one point. Bailey's field goal from the center of the court, cinched the contest. Bailey, Bettridge and Burke were the leading lights for the winners while Menge, Howard and Small starred for the M. E.

Ripney, Erstwhile Regular, Trying to Stand Off Jack Tavenor at Shortstop, the Uncertain Post.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Mar. 4—After advising the youth of the nation about the several and sundry advantages of a western habitat, the late Horace Greeley probably concluded the interview with these few, well chosen words:

"Draw down to your hand, young man, draw down to your hand."

A young man with a shirt to his back, who didn't, was likely to find himself occupying the great open spaces as a bed chamber. Furthermore, he might still have the back but not the shirt. By that time it usually loved another.

Ty Cobb, the well known Major leaguer, probably never heard the parable of the young man and his fickle shirt. Of the thirty two active players on the Detroit roster at the moment, only nine were in the minor leagues last year. In brief, Tyrus is sitting behind three aces and expects to make them stand up. He virtually is standing pat while the rest of the boys are drawing plenty. This is one of several features which make the camp a rather unique institution. Another is embodied in a drastic rule that confines the manly athletes to two meals a day. A third feature the fact that not a ball was tossed here until Monday for the reason that no players were in camp. A fourth is the epidemic of buzzards which hover over the playing field.

I was going to make a nasty remark about buzzards always following the dead, but I won't. Anyhow, it is pretty generally admitted that the local variety of buzzards is inclined to be a bit neutrolic. Our Mr. Cobb, in fact, simply ignores them.

"No, no, I won't discuss the other teams," he said today in his quick, nervous way.

"I don't pick pennant races. I just try to develop ball clubs. I think I am justified in standing pat. We have only one position open.

"Ball players eat too much, except when they are working under me. Two meals are enough for any man in active training.

"As for our late start, I don't believe in an early one. That's a pretty good reason."

The open position is at shortstop, where Emory Rigney, regular for several seasons, is attempting to stand off Jack Tavenor, a bright, ambitious young man who is willing to start at the top and work up. Rigney lost caset with Cobb last year by some five-thumbed fielding at critical junctures. He now is running second to Tavenor—an undersized ball hawk who only hits ever so often. This reflects the general tendency of the Detroit club away from hitting in favor of defense.

Travenor, up from Fort Worth, is one of the nine new men, the other eight are George Artus, semi-pro catcher from Paterson, N. J.; H. C. Carlisle, outfielder, from Charlotte, N. C.; Jesse Dayle, back again on the big time; Andy Harrington, semi-pro infielder; Bill Johnson, semi-pro pitcher from Newberry, Mich.; Bill Moore, pitcher from Rochester; Johnny Neunn, first baseman, from St. Paul; and John Walker, from Union, S. C.

Neunn and Carlisle are the only ones, aside from Tavenor, who have a white man's chance. Carlisle, scant 18-year-old and a gent who comports himself after the manner of Ken Williams, without the latter's generous feet, is supposed to take Cobb's job ultimately. He hit .346 for Charlotte last year, his first in professional baseball.

Neun will be kept around to understudy Blue at first base. The rest of the infield will be made up of Frank O'Rourke at second base, Tavenor, or Rigney at shortstop, and Bobby Jones at third base.

Cobb, Heilman, Fothergill, Manusch and Wingo will be the outfielders; Bassler and Woodall, the catchers.

The pitching staff will embrace Collins, Whitehill, Cole, Leonard, Dauss, Pillette, Sylvester, Johnson, Holloway, Stoner and Wells. It is the best by far the Tigers have mustered in many years. The last good one was the Donovan-Mullin-Killian-Willett - Summers combination of 1909. The Tigers won the pennant that year, this remark being offered for what it may be worth, if anything.

After Another Record.

NEW YORK, Mar. 4—Paavo Nurmi, the Finish record smasher, will continue his intensive runing campaign tonight when he will attempt to better the mark for the mile and one eighth distance in the indoor games at the 106th Armory in Brooklyn.

Willie Ritola, Carl Christiernsen, Swedish hurdling chompion, and Willie plant, American walking champion, also will compete in the games.

Barney Bricelin, veteran semi-pro baseballer, and manager of the 1925 Newell Laughlin baseball club, is a patient in the East Liverpool City hospital.

Saturday Is Deadline For Duck Entries

District Tournament at Liberty Alleys to Start Monday.

"District duckpin bowlers—you have until 11 o'clock Saturday night to get into the lists for championship tournament play next week on the Liberty alleys."

This was the announcement today by Manager Steel, of the Liberty alleys, under whose direction the maples will fall on four days of the coming week as old champs and new contend for 1925 duck laurels.

Over 150 names have been placed on the entry list up to date. More are expected before Saturday night—the last chance.

Steele pointed out today that fees must be in the hands of the tournament directors by Saturday night, as well as entries.

The tournament will get under way at 6 o'clock on Monday night. Play for the night will suspend at 11 o'clock. A similar program will be maintained during Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

There will be matches in singles and doubles for each contender, with total pins to count.

Four alleys will be in operation throughout the tourney.

18.2 Realm Bows to New Champ Today

Jake Schaefer Sets Two World Records in Winning Crown.

CHICAGO, March 4.—The 18.2 balk line realm bowed to a new monarch today—"Young" Jake Schaefer who last night again wrested the crown from Willie Hoppe in the finale of the International Balkline tourney here. The score was 400 to 173 for eight innings.

In walking away with the honors, Schaefer set two new world's records, one for his high run of 400 in his match with Erich Hagenlacher and the other for his grand average of 57.14.

Behind him at the finish was Edouard Horemans, Belgium, with a grand average of 45.13 and a high run of 240. This gives Horemans the right to challenge the champion, although no championship match can be played before October at the earliest.

Hoppe finished in fourth place with a grand average of 26.69. His high run during the tourney was 197.

Hagenlacher finished third, having lost to Horemans in the afternoon match yesterday, 254 to 400 in 8 frames.

TRAINING CAMP CHATTER

TAMPA, Fla., Mar. 4—With the announcement that Walter Johnson has signed a two-year contract, all doubt as to whether the famous pitcher would remain with the Washington Senators vanished and the team stepped out in the brisk morning air for a stiff workout. The salary figures in Johnson's contract were refused.

All of the Senators are here now but Gregg and he is on his way. All are said to be under contract but Reuther. Harris is putting his men through a half mile run each day, medicine ball play, and light batting and fielding practice.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 4—Talk was quite flagrant today of the Boston Braves making an eleventh hour trade for Lowery, second baseman of the Jersey City team.

The Braves are putting in some good batting and fielding practice each afternoon. Manager Bancroft is authority for the statement that the men are in better form now than during last year.

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 4.—Ty Cobb will not play baseball after this year and will manage the Tigers from the bench, the Georgian stated today.

"I will play less than 100 games this year," he said, "but I am not figuring on playing at all next season. It is time for me to quit. This year, if I am in shape, I will start the season, but later on I will have a man ready to take my place and then will take it easy."

Cobb believes now that he can be of greater value to the club as a bench manager than when he divides his time between managing the club and playing.

Texas Rangers, about whom much spicy and romantic as well as adventurous fiction has been written, and who have operated under a law more than ninety years old, have been declared unconstitutional. With a loss of salary facing the members, it is likely the organization will cease to function. A Texas ranger was reputed to be the only man single handed to unarm Pancho Villa.

11 Contenders Are Out For Honors In New Concord Games

Winners Will be Sent to Columbus for Finals in State-wide Elimination Contests to Decide Buckeye School Champions; Two More Practice Sessions Scheduled for Locals.

East Liverpool high school basketeers will make their preliminary bid for a state-wide court fame on Friday and Saturday of this week at Muskingum college, New Concord, in the district scholastic tournament.

The district tourney is the first stage in the elimination process that decides annually the school team champions of the Bucyeye state. Tournaments of a similar nature will be held throughout Ohio.

The cream of tournament play will go to Columbus for the concluding and decisive contests from which will emerge a new band of school basketball kings.

Followers of the Blue and White want to see the Ceramic City aggregation in action at Columbus. Coach O. V. Boone, however, refuses to be overly optimistic.

The East Liverpool squad is scheduled to leave here on Thursday afternoon at 3:35. They will arrive that night in New Concord.

The team will be on hand in the New Concord gym at 9 o'clock Friday morning for the drawing. The first game of the tournament will start at 10 o'clock. The school teams will play throughout Friday and Saturday until the tourney winners are crowned.

There will be 11 teams in action, according to information received yesterday afternoon by Coach Boone. Although the names of the entries were not specified, it is likely that the list will include Zanesville, Cambridge, Coshocton, McConnellsville, East Liverpool, New Philadelphia, Marietta, and probably Wellsville, Steubenville and Bellaire.

The local squad will go through their paces this afternoon. On Thursday afternoon they have a short session prior to boarding a C. & P. train for Bridgeport.

Last Night's Fights

Stribling Wins.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Mar. 4—William "Young" Stribling, the Atlanta school boy, outpointed Dan O'Dowd, Boston lightheavyweight, here last night in ten rounds. After warming up slowly the young Georgian took the fight to his heavier opponent.

The suggested new race will be for yachts not exceeding 50 feet on the water line, and the course will be from Cowes to Plymouth.

Elementary Girls' Teams Are Formed

Play First Games March 23-24; Tournament March 26-27.

Grade school basketball activities, which were launched last week on the high school court, will not be solely for the boys. Girls will have their games, as well, according to announcement today by Athletic Director O. V. Boone, who outlines plans for competition among elementary school girls' teams.

A series of games will be played on March 23 and 24. The place has not been decided upon.

These games will be followed by a tournament on March 26 and 27. A silver loving cup will be given to the school winning the tourney.

A member of the high school girls' team will be assigned to each school to act in the capacity of coach.

Eligibility requirements, and admission prices will be the same as those governing boys' games

The girls have started practice sessions in the high school gymnasium. Central and McKinley drilled yesterday. The remainder of the practice schedule follows: Thursday, March 5, Horace-Mann, Neville and Garfield; Tuesday, March 10, Washington and Pleasant Heights; Thursday, March 12, Lincoln and Sixth street; Monday, March 23, Garfield and Horace-Mann, Neville, Washington and Lincoln; Tuesday, March 24, Pleasant Heights and Sixth street, Central and McKinley.

FOR TEN YEARS—DEPENDABLE

Exceptional dependability has been a characteristic of Dodge Brothers Motor Car since the day the first of these sturdy cars was marketed.

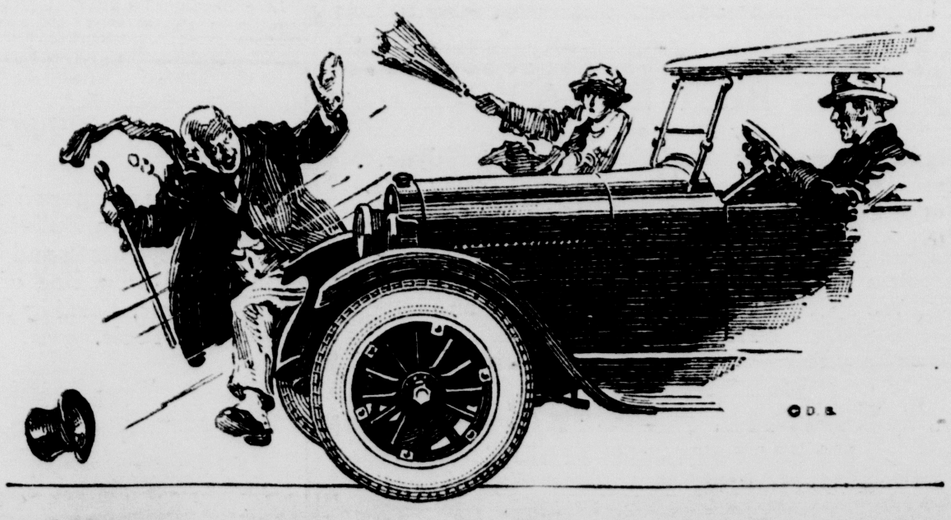

Not once in a decade has it failed to uphold and enhance its reputation for faithful performance.

The reason for its consistent goodness and continued betterment points directly back to the ideals of the founders.

Instead of fluctuating between an endless series of annual models, they determined to concentrate on the perfection of a single chassis.

Dodge Brothers Motor Car today is the embodiment of that ideal—an ideal that will endure as long as the institution itself.

Absolutely Nothing Better

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Easily and cheaply made at home, but it beats them all for quick results.

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using the well-known old recipe for making cough syrup at home. It is simple and cheap but it has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist, pour it into a pint bottle and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make a full pint. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the membranes, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle and dreaded cough disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, hoarseness or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its healing effect on the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

"Help Yourself" Hotel Liked.

At Pearsall, Tex., the sheriff of the county, H. L. Brooks, has put into operation a "help yourself" hotel, and the guests appear to like it. The guests register without assistance, erasing from a nearby blackboard, the number of the room they select. When they leave after a day or a month, they put the money to pay for their stay in an envelope and drop it into a locked box near the door. The hotel owner seldom appears, there is no cashier and servants give unobtrusive service. Mr. Brooks says he has been cheated out of only $2 thus far.

Welter Champion Tosses Defi at Mexican Heavy

LOS ANGELES, March 4.—One of the strangest matches in the history of the ring was in the making here today.

Mickey Walker, welterweight champion, has challenged Tony Fuente, the Mexican heavyweight, who recently figured in a sensational knockout bout with Fred Fulton, the plasterer from Minnesota. Although Fuente weighs more than 210 pounds, Walker announced he was anxious to box the Mexican and was certain he could knock him out.

Team Championship Is Goal Sought in Miami Tournament

MIAMI, Fla., March 4.—Sixteen golf professionals, every one of them a champion in some section of the nation, and holding practically every title worthy of note held by a professional, today started their quest for the international team championship on the Miami Country club course.

For three days, an ever-narrowing field will battle in 36 hole best ball elimination rounds. Champions will fall by eights, then by fours and finally by twos until the holders of the crown, now worn jointly by MacDonald Smith and Billy Melhorn, are determined in the final 36 hole match play Friday.

It is the second match to start which will draw the bulk of the gallery. MacDonald Smith, who has been here for a week practicing, and Billy Melhorn, who has spent most of the winter at the course, the defending champions, will take on Gene Sarazen, and Leo Diegel, leaders in the Professional Golf league of Florida, and one of the teams most feared in the tourney.

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Easily and cheaply made at home, but it beats them all for quick results.

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using the well-known old recipe for making cough syrup at home. It is simple and cheap but it has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist, pour it into a pint bottle and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make a full pint. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the membranes, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle and dreaded cough disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, hoarseness or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its healing effect on the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Precedent Is Set as Ex-President Gives Oath of Office to President

The inauguration of Calvin Coolidge marks the first time that the oath of office has been given to a president of the United States by a former president. Chief executives are sworn in by the chief justice of the United States, and Chief Justice William Howard Taft was the twenty-seventh president. The president and the chief justice are shown.

CARD OF THANKS.

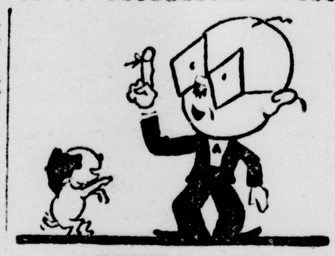

We desire to thank the neighbors and friends who so kindly assisted in any way during the sickness and death of our little darling, Margery Greer.

We desire to thank the Berean Bible class, the Wyoming club and all those who sent floral offerings. Especially do we thank the Rev. B. R. Johnson for his kind words of sympathy.

"Help Yourself" Hotel Liked.

At Pearsall, Tex., the sheriff of the county, H. L. Brooks, has put into operation a "help yourself" hotel, and the guests appear to like it. The guests register without assistance, erasing from a nearby blackboard, the number of the room they select. When they leave after a day or a month, they put the money to pay for their stay in an envelope and drop it into a locked box near the door. The hotel owner seldom appears, there is no cashier and servants give unobtrusive service. Mr. Brooks says he has been cheated out of only $2 thus far.

COOLIDGE, DAWES SWORN IN

ALL PAGEANTRY IS CAST ASIDE AT INAUGURAL OF PRESIDENT

Ostentatious Display of Other Years Banned by Executive.

THRONG CHEERS

Leader Renews Oath he Took in Lamp-lit Vermont Room.

By GEORGE R. HOLMES

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Casting aside the ostentatious display and glittering pageantry of other years, Calvin Coolidge bared his head to the chill March wind, on the plaza of the capitol today and in one of the simplest inaugural ceremonies on record, renewed the oath of office that he originally took nineteen months ago in the lamp-lit room of his father's Vermont farmhouse under tragic and dramatic circumstances.

Cheering Thousands Look On.

A handful of hastily garbed, awe-struck relatives were the sole witnesses of that other ceremony 19 months ago, but today there were cheering thousands in the multitude that looked on and acclaimed him—completing a cycle of events unparalleled in the history of the republic.

A few moments after he had repeated the words of the oath intoned by the black-robed chief justice, Calvin Coolidge squared his shoulders, faced the panoramic sea of humanity in front of him and proclaimed to the country and to the world the basic principles which will guide him in the conduct of the nation's affairs for the next four years.

These, he said, would embrace peace

DAWES TAKES OFFICE OATH

Cummins Presides at Ceremony on Rostrum of Senate.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Charles Gates Dawes, of Evanston, Ill., this afternoon was inaugurated vice-president of the United States.

Standing on the rostrum where, for the next four years, he will preside over the senate, Dawes was administered the oath by Senator Cummins, Republican, of Iowa, retiring president pro-tem. Cummins had occupied the chair since teh elevation of President Coolidge to the White House in August, 1923.

The brief ceremonies in the senate were in strictest accord with entire unpretentious inaugural program.

A distinguished company, including President Coolidge and all the high officials of the government, witnessed Dawes' inauguration.

As soon as he had taken the oath, Dawes assumed the chair, and after a prayer by the chaplain, delivered a brief address. He then read the presidential proclamation, calling the senate into extraordinary session. This

President, in Inaugural Address, Asks United States Example in Moderate Armament and Declares "Our Most Important Problem is Not to Secure New Advantages, But to Maintain Those we Already Possess."

PROMISES TO CONTINUE FOR FOUR YEARS POLICIES HE INAUGURATED

In Short Speech, he Calls for Further Tax Reductions, Encouragement to American Business, Enforcement of Laws, Party Responsibility in Government and Non-interference in Legitimate Private Enterprises.

By GEORGE R. HOLMES

WASHINGTON, March 4.—"Our most important problem is NOT to secure new advantages, but to maintain those we already possess."

With this sage observation concerning the task at hand, Calvin Coolidge assumed the presidency of the United States today, and in one of the shortest, simplest inaugural addresses on record pledged himself to continue for four years the policies he has already inaugurated.

These policies he set forth in his brief address as follows:

Abroad—A continuation of American helpfulness and co-operation where deserved; aloofness from the political quarrels and jealousies of the Old World; with America setting a moral example for the world in moderate armament, and displaying a willingness always to substitute the rule of reason for the rule of force.

At home—A continuation of the rigid economy in government that already has marked his administration; further tax reduction; encouragement to American business; enforcement of laws; party responsibility in government; and non-interferece by the government in legitimate private business.

Those who came to the wind-swept Plaza of the Capitol today expecting to see "a new Coolidge" stepping into the Presidency in his own right, and accompanying it with a glittering speech setting forth new policies and new goals, were not accorded any such spectacle.

Showed Calmness.

With the same calmness that has ever marked his official acts, Mr. Coolidge simply interpreted the November election as a national endorsement of his administration and a mandate from the people to continue along the roadway he has been traveling.

He presented no detailed program of administration effort for the next four years; he urged no great reforms; he advocated no radical changes—he said that America is the most fortunate and favored of all nations, now enjoying an era of great prosperity, and it would be his unceasing endeavor to keep it that way.

He served unmistakable notice that under his leadership the Republican party will be a disciplined party, and, indirectly, he referred to and endorsed the expulsion from the party of the La Follette rebels who broke away from the Republican standard in the last campaign.

"If there is to be a responsible party government," he declared, "the party label must be something more than a mere device for securing office. Un-

Nazarene Church Vacates Quarters Leased to Moyer Brothers.

Edward Dickson, Steubenville, deputy state inspector of factories and workshops, yesterday, ordered the razing of the front and west walls of the Wasbutzky building, one of the three structures, destroyed in the $750,000 blaze, which wiped out a section of the Fifth street and Diamond alley business district on February 22.

Dickson came here at the request of deputy state fire marshals, who have been probing the fire. After an inspection, he announced that the two walls of the structure were not safe.

The inspector and Safety Director S. E. Anderson notified Mrs. Mendel Wasbutzky, owner of the building, that the walls must be torn down. She promised to comply with the order at once.

Thousands of Spectators Line Pennsylvania Avenue for Great Spectacle of Change of Administration.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The curtain went up promptly at 11 o'clock today on the capital's great quadrennial spectacle of the death of one administration and the birth of another.

At that hour, President Coolidge left the executive mansion for the capitol and the seat of government for the time being was transferred to the great grey dome at the end of Pennsylvania avenue.

Preceded by a troop of cavalry and a troop of mounted police, the presidential automobile, containing Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge and Senator Curtis of Kansas, Republican leader of the senate, proceeded slowly through Pennsylvania avenue, lined with thousands of spectators.

The presidential party arrived at the capitol at 11:16 a. m. President Coolidge went to the president's room in the senate wing and General Dawes went into the vice president's room.

Coolidge Address Is Broadcast for 700 School Pupils

By means of a radio set, installed through the courtsey of the Risinger Electric company, more than 700 members of the high school here "listened in" on the Coolidge inauguration ceremonies today.

The students were dismissed for lunch at 10:35 a. m., reporting back at 11:15 o'clock. They were assembled in the high school auditorium.

A program of flag drills, orchestra music and other features was given during intermission in the Wasnington program when the radio was silent. The exercises closed at the conclusion of President Coolidge's address, shortly before 1 o'clock.

There was no noon hour recess in the high school, the 40-minute dismissal in the forenoon taking its place. This is the first time that the high school students have been permitted to "listen in" on the inaugural.

C. C. McCauley Agrees To Pay $69.30 Check After His Arrest

C. C. McCauley of Washington avenue, Wellsville, was at liberty today after arranging in the court of Justice P. V. Mackall to make good a check for $69.30 drawn on the Citizens' National bank and given G. R. Cunningham, Newell grocer.

McCauley was arrested by Wellsville police and brought here by Constable T. C. Martin. He was fined $100 and costs on a charge of uttering a worthless check, but the fine was suspended upon condition that he pay the costs in the case and make good the loss.

Blazes in Rollins and Ammon Dwellings Call Firemen.

Three alarms were answered by the fire department during the 24-hour period preceding noon today.

Loss estimated at about $1,500 occurred when a frame garage, owned by Daniel J. Pauley, Chestnut street, caught fire from a gas stove about 5 o'clock this morning. The blaze was discovered by Verne Carson, who resides nearby.

Neighbors broke down the garage doors and pushed out an automobile belonging to Forrest Bennett. However, before the engine could be started, the car, standing in the alley, caught fire from the garage and was practically destroyed.

Upon the arrival of the firemen at the scene of the fire, they found a nearby plug frozen up and were forced to attach their hose to another plug further away.

President's Wife Wears "Joseena" on Trip to Capitol

WASHINGTON, Mar. 4.—When Grace Coolidge rode down Pennsylvania avenue this morning with her distinguished husband, she probably started a rush upon modistes and dressmakers that will last for several days.

All because the first's inaugural costume represented the ultra-ultra in the latest style.

Her dress was fashioned of "joseena." Its color was "Moonstone."

For the benefit of the novitiate, "joseena" is a new cloth, something of a cross between duvetyn and crash cloth with a dull finish.

"Moonstone" is the latest color to be evolved by those who prognosticate the fashions. It is a grey, somewhat darker than pearl, and with a warmer appearance.

The costume was an "ensemble" with a bodice of crepe de china, and a collar of grey fox on the coat. Silver embroidery embellished the coat from shoulder to hem.

Mrs. Coolidge's hat was a modish spring model of straw, high crown and drooping, narrow brim, with a burnt-goose band.

Grey slippers completed the outfit.

J. M. Manor's Car Stolen as Owner Attends Theatre

Police today are searching for a Jewet sedan, belonging to J. M. Manor, Avondale stree, which was stolen from East Fourth street while Mr. Manor and his family were attending a theatre last evening.

Manor discovered the theft when he left the theatre about 10:45 o'clock and immediately notified the police. The car carried license No. 241-376.

DAWES, MOST PICTURESQUE FIGURE IN AMERICAN LIFE, BECOMES VICE-PRESIDENT; HE IS FINANCIER, BUT CANNOT TELL LIFE STORY IN ONE WORD

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Charles G. Dawes today became the thirtieth vice president of the United States.

It has been 146 years since John Adams assumed the same office under Washington. Adams was an outstanding figure of his time, and so were many of those who followed him—Jefferson, Burr, Clinton, Calhoun, Rosevelt. Great men and men NOT so great have been numbered among the twenty-nine predecessors of Charles Gates Dawes. And yet it is doubtful if any of them brought into public life a personality more colorful or a record more filled with brilliant and versatile achievement than "Hell 'n Maria" Dawes.

More Than Financier.

The formal biographies of Charles G. Dawes list his vocation as 'financier.' But they don't tell the story of his life in that one word. It is true he is one of the foremost bankers and financiers of the country, but he also has been, and still is on occasion:

An engineer,
A soldier,
An inventor,
A musician and a composer of music
A politician,
An oil magnate,
An economist of international renown;
A lawyer,
An author of note,
A philanthropist, whose benefactions amount to considerably more than the public realizes.
A shrewd stock market operator, and
A public utilities expert.

All in 60 Years.

All this in 60 years. And in between times he has found time to cultivate a taste for golf, for horses, for pipes, and for picturesque profanity.

Dawes has been in and out of public life several times over this span of 60 years, so he makes his re-entry on the Washington stage as an old, experienced actor who probably knows as much about the inside workings of the American government, its strength and its weaknesses, as any other official here.

He was a tall, gangling young man of barely 30 when he received his political baptism. It was in the McKinley movement in Illinois in the '90s. He was one of the chief directors of the McKinley campaign in the Middle West in 1896. He came to Washington the next year as Comptroller of the Currency, the youngest man ever to have held the post. He was 31 at the time.

He stayed on the job five years. When he left it was to organize and become head of the Central Trust Company of Illinois, which since 1902 has grown until now it is ranked as one of the foremost financial institutions of the country.

Interests Varied.

Coincident with his banking, he became interested in gas wells, oil wells, coal mines and what not, and he prospered to such an extent that today he is a very wealthy man.

The business of piling up dollars was fascinating, but it could not hold entirely the attention of a personality so energetic and dynamic as that of General Dawes.

He became interested in music at an age when most business men express their interest in this art with checks rather than by seeking knowledge about it. He became what the critics call an "autodidact"—that is, a self-taught player. The violin was his hobby. He mastered it and then turned to composing. His success at composing may best be judged by the fact that his "Melody in A" is one of the most popular bits in Fritz Kreisler's repertoire. It is a plaintive, haunting little lullaby—as different from the bluff exterior of Charles Gates Dawes as day is from night. Many people hear it on their phonographs without associating it with the explosive General.

His most widely known philanthrophy has been the establishment and maintenance of the Rufus Dawes hotel. It aids young men and men down on their luck, and thousands of men throughout the Middle West have been at one time or another the beneficiaries of its hospitality. It was established in memory of the General's only son, who met a tragic and accidental death soon after reaching his majority.

When the World War came along, General Dawes was 52 years of age. It offered him an outlet for the tremendous energies that have marked his entire career.

Pershing and he were old friends from Lincoln, Neb., where Dawes had been a practicing lawyer from 1887 to 1894.

Two months from the day war was declared he was wearing a major's uniform and commanding a battalion of railroad engineers. A month later he was in France—one of the first civilian officers to reach the other side. Pershing particularly wanted railroad personnel to prepare the lines of communication for the millions to come.

Because of his great executive experienced and all-around business ability, Pershing made him General Purchasing agent of American Expeditionary Forces in September, 1917, and he served in that capacity, and later, as the American member of the Inter-Allied Purchasing Board, throughout the war.

The campaign of 1920, with Harding opposing Cox reawakened Dawes' love of politics, and he plunged into it with fervor. He was one of the "best minds" that surrounded Harding at Marion and he was a frequent visitor to the White House after Harding was inaugurated.

Harding persuaded him that there was a great field of public service in the Directorship of the Budget. The Budget had just been established by law; Dawes had always been in favor of it, and so he became the first director of the scheme to co-ordinate and put governmental expenditures on a business like basis.

Back to Europe.

He got the system nicely established, and then his restless spirit started looking for new worlds to conquer.

Europe was in a mess. France was

Coolidge Became President Under Glow of Lamp; Then Elected By Huge Ballot

His Father, Coatless and Collarless Administered Oath in Country Home Far up in Vermont.

By GEORGE F. DURNO.

WASHINGTON, March 4—Nineteen months ago to a day, while the nation still gasped at the sudden and unexpected passing of its President, a mild-mannered, slightly stoop-shouldered man of no outstanding physical characteristics, slipped quietly into Washington to take over the exacting duties of State which had been largely responsible for President's Harding's death.

The night before—and the setting was indicative of the man—Calvin Coolidge had taken the oath of office in the country home of his fathe far up in the Vermont hills. A single, flickering oil lamp lighted the ceremony. His father, coatless and collarless, administered the oath, as telegraphed hurriedly from Washington.

Perhaps a thousand of the more curious citizens had assembled outside the hotel, wherein was set up a temporary "White House," to observe the coming of their new President.

The motor conveying him drew up to the curb. The ever-present Secret Service men opened a path for him and he walked briskly through the entrance.

Was Unrecognized.

The crowd gave no sign of recognition. It waited on. When was the President coming? it asked. It was half an hour before police convinced the last one of that curious thousand citizens that the man they had gathered to see had passed inside.

Calvin Coolidge, who for two years and a half had served the nation in Washington as Vice-President, had returned virtually unknown.

Today that man is taking the presidency in his own name—the award of 16,000,000 voters. His name and face are known in the four corners of the earth.

In a year and seven months President Coolidge has established himself firmly in the annals of American politics. His methods have been unique; his actions have defied many political precedents; but, nevertheless, they have been accounted successful. In that short time the man who, rumor stated, was to be dropped from the national ticket to make room for one or more forceful appearance, climbed up to the top of the ladder and established himself in his own right.

Quietly, and in a manner foreign to the politicians as popularly pictured, Calvin Coolidge plodded through the remaining months of Harding's term of office and literally lifted himself into four more presidential years. He conducted his administration in a methodical fashion, strangely reminiscent of the small-town merchant; and, as the small-town merchant often is successful, so President Coolidge has been termed successful.

Is Very Retiring.

Reticent and retiring, possessed of none of the oratorical ability usually vested in the successful politician, the president has operated under what were counted major handicaps at the outset of his administration. What had been held to be handicaps were converted into virtues. The voters were impressed with the fact that Calvin Coolidge was safe and sane, and their vote of confidence was one of the largest on record.

The conduct of the Presidential office under Coolidge is a matter of highly ordered routine, calculated to dispose of a maximum amount of work during a certain portion only of the day. C. Bascom Slemp, who retired today as secretary to the President, installed much of the system; the President's natural inclination and mode of life brought about the rest.

Every morning, from 9 to 12:30 o'clock, the President receives callers by appointment. Each visitor is allotted from one minute to fifteen minutes. No interviews are scheduled in the afternoon; and after lunch the President returns to his office and disposes of routine, which includes the signing of mail matter and the perusal of official reports.

For this daily routine Coolidge keeps himself fit with a minimum of exercise. Unlike his predecessors, he has no leaning towrad athletic diversion. He does not play golf, as did Wilson and Harding. Horseback riding, swimming, fishing and other sports usually indulged in by men in their fifties are not included in the President's scheme of entertainment.

Artificial Horse.

Instead, President Coolidge arises early every morning and takes a short walk. After lunch he takes a brief nap, and just before dinner he takes another short walk. An early retiring hour and meals at regular hours complete his formula for keeping physically fit. He also takes exercise on an artificial horse.

Under this schedule, Coolidge has gained eight pounds in weight. He looks better than he has looked at any time since coming to Washington. He seems to be thriving in the man-killing job that broke down his two immediate predecessors.

The President's chief diversion appears to come from the periodic trips on the yacht Mayflower. Hardly a week-end goes by that he and Mrs. Coolidge and a small party of friends do not take a short jaunt down the Potomac river.

And here again develops the unusual nature of the man. It is said by those who have accompanied him on the cruise that once aboard he keeps almost entirely to himself. His guests see him only at meal times. He prefers complete relaxation, uninterrupted by the usual small-talk to be expected in such a social gathering.

Reports to the contrary, affairs of State are seldom discussed aboard the Mayflower. Sometimes, when a matter of importance is confronting the Administration, Mr. Coolidge will select his guest list from among those vitally interested in the issue. But he does not include himself in the conference, leaving the discussion to his guests.

Economy Keynote.

Economy has been the keynote of the Coolidge administration, and he carries his creed into his private life. Recently, on a trip to Chicago, the entire Presidential party traveled in an ordinary Pullman, because, as the President told his friends, he saw no reason why he should pay twenty-five fares for a private car that would accommodate but ten.

Another instance of his economical inclination is being given here today in connection with the inaugural ceremonies. Although local business men begged and pleaded for an elaborate ceremony, with one of the old time parades, the President was adamant. He vetoed, virtually in its entirety, the big program tentatively submitted to him by his inaugural committee.

The Puritan instincts of his New England forebears are the outstanding feature of America's thirtieth President. Taciturn, saving, addicted to ordered routine and simplicity, Calvin Coolidge, as his campaign slogan shouted to the nation, continues to "Keep cool!"

Crows Laugh at Scarecrow.

Jasper Ritz of O'Neil, Neb., put up a scarecrow in his hog feeding lot, but found that thousands of crows were calling daily, unmindful of the grim visage designed to scare them away. He then hit upon the idea of mounting a stuffed coyote on the scarecrow and the plan worked. His cornerig and feeding lot was immediately left unmolested.

First and Second Ladies of the Land

"The First Lady of the Land" and the "Second Lady of the Land" are devoted friends. Mrs. Coolidge and Mrs. Charles G. Dawes, wife of the vice president, are seen at the White House.

"Thundering Herd" Bigger Hit Than "The Covered Wagon"

"Variety," the nationally known theatrical publication, lauds "Thundering Herd," which is booked to appear in the near future at the Ceramic theatre, as the "greatest western picture since 'The Covered Wagon.'" Says "Variety:"

"The credit for the wallop goes to the director, Irvin Willat, who certainly has turned out a masterpiece of screen art in this production. It is a western that carries its thrilling punches done in snow. Willat's composition photographically is something that stands out tremendously. He has achieved groppings and scenes that rival the best that that great artist of the west, Frederick Remington, has done. Willat qualifies as the Remington of the screen after this one.

"Heading the cast are Jack Holt, Louis Wilson, Noah Beery and Raymond Hatton. This quartet stand out wonderfully well in their characterizations. Miss Wilson is coming along so strongly in pictures of this nature that it won't be long when the screen will have a woman western star and her name will be Lois Wilson. Jack Holt is doing some of the best work that he has ever done before the camera. Noah Beery is lighter in tone playing the heavy than usual and because of this creates a much better impression. Hatten with his supressed comedy qualifies perfectly, but there is another member of the cast to whom all credit should be given, Eulalie Jensen. Miss Jensen enacts the role of a heavy that is willing to stick a knife or fire a shot into anyone that crosses her and the manner in which she registers it makes her stand out remarkably. The rather youthful Maxine Elliott Hicks with only a rather small bit handles it sufficiently well to warrant notice.

"But it isn't the cast, the director, the story or the photography that makes "The Thundering Herd" a truly great picture. It is the thrills. They come along in the snow scenes and are without doubt the greatest punch wallops that have been seen on the screen in a long long while. So thrilling are the crashes of the wagons, the falling and kicking of the horses that women in the audiences gasp as they come to pass."

Waltz City Wars on Jazz

Vienna, long the dream waltz city, due to being the home of the great Johann Strauss, known as the "Waltz King" of Austria, and Franz Lehar, of 'Merry Widow' fame, has openly rebelled against jazz music of the "tom tom" type. Jazz bands imported from America have so gotten on the nerves of the Viennese, it is said, that an ordinance forbidding jazz music at dancing schools has been passed.

East Liverpool Man Got Rid Of Catarrh Quick

Began to Notice the Improvement From the First Day.

"Just want to say I have never used anything that gave me quick results as World's Tonic," said Mr. Sam Johnson a few days ago. Continuing, he stated that for eight years he had been a constant sufferer from catarrh and in that time had used may kinds of medicine recommended for this disease, but World's Tonic, he says, is the only thing that ever did him any real good. From the first few days he began to note improvement. It went right to the spot and by the time he had finished his first bottle, the dripping of the nasty mucus from head to throat that caused him to almost constantly be clearing and spitting and discharges of the nose stopped. The fullness in his head, huskiness of his voice inflammed throat and other distressing symptoms quickly disappeared. However, he said, "I expect to use two or six more bottles of World's Tonic to be sure the results are permanent."

Experts on catarrh say that the ravages of this disease in the final stages are almost unbelievable. No matter how slight an attack of catarrh you may suffer from, you should secure help at once, otherwise, serious developments are sure to come in the course of time, and frequently very quickly.

World's Tonic is something catarrh sufferers have long needed. It is a systematic treatment for catarrh and it is made especially to combat this disease. World's Tonic fights catarrh at its source, clearing up the system and has brought astonishing results in an exceedingly short time in countless cases.

Stomach Bloated With Gas Was His Worry

Mr. D. Zelinka, of New York, N. Y., writes: "I want you to know that no day passed for months and months that did not find my stomach bloated with gas and shooting pains darting through my stomach. I felt hungry at times, but as soon as I started eating, food nauseated me and I became bilious My tongue was coated, had bad taste and breath was offensive. COUNCIL PASSES 5 ORDINANCES

Three on Third Readings, Two Under Suspended Rules.

The service-safety fund ordinance, the civil service clerk pay ordinance, the special police pay measure were passed on third and final readings last night by council, and the rules were suspended to permit the municipal lawmakers to approve the city repairman ordinance and resolution repaying Mayor James Barnes for police expenditures.

The service-safety fund ordinance authorizes the distribution of collections from fines and forefeited bonds, two-thirds to the service fund and one-third to the safety fund.

The civil service measure provides an annual salary of $50 for the clerk of the board.

The special police pay measure, calling for a daily rate of $4.20 to be paid special officers who may be hired in times of necessity, required the vote of Council President Frank Blackburn before it was adopted. Council, previous to last night, had passed the measure on two readings by a four to three vote. Last night Councilman William Connor, one of the affirmative voters, was absent. President Blackburn's vote, which favored the measure, broke the three-three tie.

The city repairman ordinance creates that office, defines the holder's duties as of a general nature, as may be outlined by the service-safety director, and places his wages at 75 cents an hour, and his helper's at 65 cents an hour.

He will make daily reports to the service-safety director who will keep his and his helper's time, and direct their work.

The solons suspended rules in order to pass on third reading a resolution certifying the auditor to pay $50.40 to Mayor James Barnes. The latter expended that amount from his own purse during the recent prohibition activities.

Solons Ewing, White and Kerr, members of the council finance committee, were named as a committee to investigate progress on plans for the pavement of Eells avenue and Lisbon street.

City Engineer John George probably will be called into conference.

Councilman Nicholson, chairman of the street and lights committee, reported unfavorably on conditions at the Twentieth street sewer, a subject that has been up before council on numerous occasions.

He pointed out that the condition of the sewer made it a continual bill of expense and advised remedial action. As a result, solons decided to inspect the sewer on Thursday night at 5 o'clock. The traction company engineer probably will accompany them.

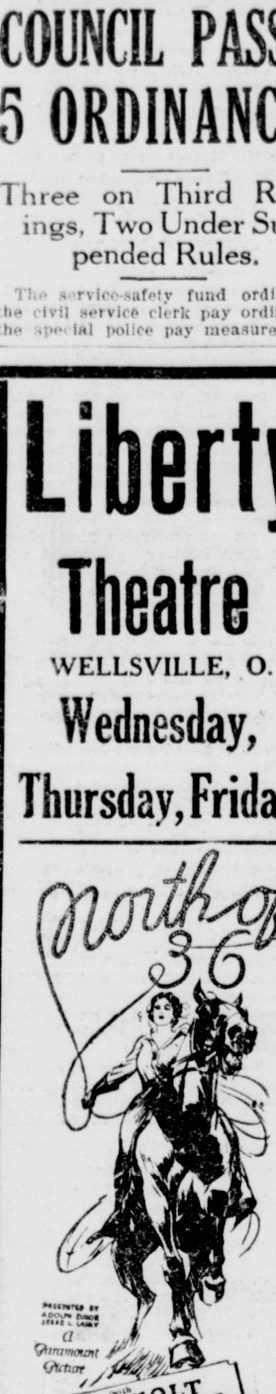

Councilman Nicholson also called attention to sewer conditions in Clark avenue, near the Buckeye Brick plant. He asserted that the sewer there was stopped up and that water from the brick company's clay mine is running into the street.

M. P. REVIVALS DRAW CROWDS

Revival services in the First Methodist Protestant church, Tenth and Main street, continue to merit an increase in interest and attendance. The pastor, Rev. R. Ernest Games, is being assisted by Rev. O. E. Vice, evangelist, of Coshocton, O.

The evangelist preached Monday night on, "The Broken Hedge," basing his discourse on Eccl., 10:8, "Whoso Breaketh a Hedge, a Serpent Shall Bite Him."

Rev. Vice pointed out various ways in which men break through God's hedges of restraint, always to their own ruin. At the close of the message many responded to the altar call and several confessed conversion.

Last night was "Guest Night" and delegations from neighboring cities attended.

Special music is being featured at each of the services. Last night a quartet composed of Miss Winifred Barnes, Mrs. Earl Adams, J. M. Culp and E. M. Householder presented a special number, "Oh, Saviour, Thou Art Standing," and Mrs. Elizabeth Burford Baker, of East Liverpool sang, "The Old Rugged Cross."

Tuesday night Rev. Vice spoke on the topic, "Where God Found Adam." Special music was supplied by Ed. Patch, of Wellsville, and Dr. and Mrs. O. L. Thompson, of Empire.

Wednesday night is Sunday school night when teachers and scholars of the Sunday school will attend in a body.

Rev. Games has extended an invitation to attend the services, which will continue throughout the week, with the exception of Saturday. The services will close on Sunday night.

CITY LAUNCHES FIRE HOSE PROBE

Is Wellsville out of step in the matter of fire hose connections?

This is the question which city council last night entrusted to Service-Safety Director A. P. Dennis for a solution.

The matter was brought up as a result of assertions made following the disastrous East Liverpool fire, in which Wellsville hose could not be used because of a difference in connections.

Councilman C. C. Ewing held the belief that hose connections in Steubenville, Toronto and Wellsville were uniform, and that East Liverpool's are different.

Director Dennis will endeavor to ascertain definitely if Wellsville needs new connections.

SOLONS PASS UP TAXING MEASURE

City council last night passed up proposed action on House bill 27, passed February 4, and approved February 10 by the governor.

The bill permits city legislative bodies and school districts to make tax levys to meet current indebtedness as of February 1, 1925.

It was pointed out that if the city takes advantage of the bill, city taxes would be increased.

Council heard the bill read, but took no action.

THREE IN JAIL ON MURDER CHARGES

For the first time in the history of Columbiana county three men are confined in the county jail at the same time on charges of first degree murder.

They are: James Gagliaggi, Wellsville, charged with the slaying of Rocco Venzento; Dominick Strathers and Fred Longo, both of Canton, held in the shooting of Mrs. Mike Desmo.

This is a new jail record, according to Sheriff George Wright.

Strict orders have been issued that no one be permitted to see any of the three men, other than attorneys who may be employed to defend them.

Cases against these prisoners will be investigated by the special grand jury which went into session this morning at 9:30 o'clock.

Robert West, 12 years old, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert West, of Main street, near Seventh, is back home again.

Young Bob was found yesterday in a Pittsburgh Y. M. C. A., after he had been gone from home here two days.

Pittsburgh authorities, with whom Chief of Police John Fultz communicated following the report of the boy's absence from home here, found young West in a downtown Y. M. C. A. building.

He told the magistrate before whom he was taken that he had run away to see the country. Before he left home, he took $42 belonging to his father, the boy told police.

He was kept in the juvenile detention rooms there until his parents arrived.

Pink and white formed the decorations in the dining room. Centering the table was a huge bouquet of pink and white tulips and sweet peas. The nut cups formed pink roses and two cards, tied with pink ribbon hidden in the petals revealed news of the engagement. Following the dinner, each guest hemmed a towel for the bride-to-be.

Guests included Misses Adelia Nunley, Florence Nunley, Lillian Nunley, Mrs. W. W. "North of 36" Film, At Liberty Theatre, Replete With Thrills

The journey of Columbus across the Atlantic in 1492 required no more courage than the trip made by the pioneers of the south in their attempt to establish a definite trail between Texas and the railroads in Kansas.

The first caravan traveling from the Gulf of Mexico to northern United States faced fearful odds—Indians, Carpet-baggers, floods, fire, wild animals, and many more obstacles described in Emerson Hough's historical novel, "North of 36," which Irvin Willat produced in picture form for Paramount.

Like Columbus, the first caravan had no guide save the compass and stars. Nobody had ever been over the trail before. Those who had attempted never returned to tell the tale. What happened, nobody ever knew.

The picture opens a three days' run at the Liberty Theatre, Wellsville today.

Typical Coolidge Message

Calvin Coolidge of Massachusetts today became president of the United States "in his own right."

As thousands, massed in the broad plaza stretching eastward from the capitol building to the congressional library, watched and at least 20,000,000 other citizens "listened in" on the radio, he took the oath of office upon a Bible his grandmother gave him and from which he learned to read as a boy.

A few minutes before the administering of the oath by Chief Justice Taft, who 16 years ago was sworn at his own inauguration, Charles Gates Dawes, of Illinois, became vice-president, the ceremony occurring in the chamber of the senate.

After assuming the reins of the government, which he guided since the death of Warren G. Harding, President Coolidge delivered a typical Coolidge message to the American people. He pledged economy in government, urged America's entrance into the world court and expressed the wish that the United States might continue to prosper, that the lot of each man, woman and child might be a happy one. He did not waste any words in flowery rhetoric. Speaking from his heart, his utterances were those of a man who loves his country.

He voiced his desire that labor should receive full and adequate return; he reiterated his opposition to cancellation of any of the foreign debts; he said peace must come from the heart.

And, too, the president drove home the importance of saving the taxpayer's money, for he desires to lessen the burden now borne by the people.

He also made it clear that he opposes the use of a party label for the purpose of being elected to any office. In other words, he does not believe in preaching one thing on the stump and practicing another after election.

Of especial interest to American industry, struggling against cheap labor abroad, he declared his support of a protective tariff.

The Coolidge message, characterized by simplicity and earnestness, was typical of the man who has proved his qualifications for the high office bestowed upon him by his countrymen and women who expressed their confidence in him by an avalanche of votes last November.

Two Wars Are Over

A couple of good wars are apparently ended, aftermath and all. One of these is the Civil war, which has hung on in bitterness and misunderstanding for nearly 60 years. But north and south have now become really good friends, the south is becoming truly prosperous, and old wounds are pronounced healed.

The other war now happily ended is the American Revolutio nof 1776. Our public schools today teach the history of that conflict with more emphasis on the development of political liberty and the advance of constitutional government than on condemnation of British "redcoats" and a tyrant king. People are able to look at the Revolution as a part of history rather than as an intimate conflict in which they must take violently partisan sides.

The other day, in Washington, D. C., before an audience of 5,000 persons, the British ambassador was enthusiastically cheered when he presented a gold medal to a school girl as an award for her fine essay on "The Surrender of York, October 19, 1781. Its influence for the Welfare of the British Empire."

The World war of 1914-18 is not yet over in the sense that these two wars are. Will it take 150 years or even 60 years for the world to recover from it? Of course it was a bigger and more terrible war than any preceding it. On the other hand, the world today has better facilities for seeing things straight; it has had much experience to profit by, and it ought to have learned something about putting a finished war in its historical place. Neither the Revolution nor the Civil war will have to be fought over again. Only folly should make it necessary to suffer another World war.

Haskin Letter

BY FREDERIC J. HASKIN

THE PACIFIC MANEUVERS

WASHINGTON, March 4.—In the heat of the controversy raised by Brigadier General Mitchell's charges regarding the condition of the air service, the public has lost sight for the moment at least of one of the most important defensive tests ever undertaken by this country in time of peace, namely, the approaching joint maneuvers in the Pacific.

One of the most disturbing statements made by General Mitchell before the house military affairs committee was to the effect that an enemy power could speedily overwhelm America's possessions in the Pacific ocean, that is, Hawaii, Guam and the Philippine Islands because of the weakness of this country's air defense.

Long before the aircraft inquiry was started the navy department and the war department had planned jointly to conduct maneuvers this spring in the Pacific to ascertain to what extent the security of the Hawaiian Islands is assured by the present defense plans of the United States.

From the naval and military viewpoint everything, as far as this region is concerned, hinges on Hawaii, or to be more accurate, on the Island of Oahu, which contains the military garrisons and mortresses, the naval base at Pearl harbor and the city of Hononiulu. Let it be conceded that this pivot of America's outlying defense is weak, and the entire defensive system of the country west of the Panama canal crumbles. Hence the importance of the joint maneuvers.

Considered in the light of the world situation, the military and naval tests concentrated on Hawaii have added significance. The World war and the Washington conference shifted the center of naval startegy into the Pacific, with Hawaii as the hub of major operations in the event of a conflict. Under the terms of the Washington conference, Guam and the Philippines were practically abandoned as military and naval outposts, and consequently came a far-reaching revision of American strategy.

There is no secret as to what that strategy is in its major aspects. It is based on a few cardinal principles. The first and most important is so to strengthen the land fortresses and the naval bases as to leave the naval forces of the country the utmost degree of mobility to go wherever the exigencies of a given situation demand.

ATTRACTS WORLD-WIDE ATTENTION

In this scheme of defense there are two major pivots, namely, the Panama canal and the Hawaiian Islands. As long as the latter are held by the United States, with a strong and mobile naval force concentrated on Oahu our naval strategists assume that it would be suicide for a hostile force to attempt operations with the canal zone as the objective. With these strategic principles visualized, it is easy to understand why the first two joint maneuvers were based on the canal zone and why the coming tests are based on Hawaii. In all probability this year's tests will provoke more international attention than any military or naval maneuvers held since the conclusion of the World war.

At the first streak of dawn on the morning of April 15, the United States battle fleet will weigh anchor and steam out of the Golden Gate on the first leg of the voyage to Hawaii and Australia. The fleet will be designated as the "Blue Fleet" and at some point of the voyage its commander will receive wireless orders to consider himself as an enemy and to attack the Hawaiian Islands.

For the purpose of the war game, the latter will be referred to as the "Black Power" and the naval and military forces constituting the defense of the islands will receive a radio message that an attack is impending from a powerful enemy. The plan calls for operations to be conducted under conditions simulating war as closely as possible. It assumes, first, that the Hawaiian Islands do not belong to the United States but to the black power and that the blue fleet has been sent to capture them; second, that the islands are defended as at present by naval forces based on Pearl harbor and a military force amounting to some 15,000 men, including coast artillery and aircraft.

According to responsible sources, the purpose of the war game is three-fold:

First, to train the army and navy in joint operations, thereby aiming to overcome a defect centuries old, namely, the failure of most army and navy joint operations because of lack of team work.

Second, to test the adequacy of the present defense of Hawaii in order to ascertain what further preparations are necessary to resist a possible attack from a foreign foe.

Third, to try out new naval methods of attack against the defended point, including in this instance the co-operation of aircraft with the battleships of the blue fleet. It was the orginal intention to use a military landing force in conjunction with the blue fleet operations, but the lack of appropriations made it necessary to abandon this important feature of the maneuvers.

UMPIRES WILL DECIDE RESULT

The test will be presided over by a board of umpires. The chief of staff and the commander-in-chief of the fleet will occupy jointly the post of chief umpires. There will be a senior blue umpire and a senior black umpire. This board will decide the results of the operations. When a battleship comes under the fire of the shore fortresses and is unequal to the concentration of fire it will be declared out of action and compelled to raise the "sunk" flag. The same fate will overtake the fortresses that are outranged by the guns of the fleet.

Should the blue fleet be adjudged successful in the attack on Hawaii, it is probable that the umpires will make recommendations to the war and navy departments for the development of the defensive scheme of Hawaii. This was what actually happened two years ago when the black fleet, then the attacking enemy, succeeded in shelling the Gatun locks of the Panama canal. The lesson deduced was the need for more long range 16-inch guns wherewith the shore batteries can keep a fleet at bay at least long enough for the United States fleet to get through the canal and engage the enemy on equal terms on the Pacific side. Another important lesson was that more anti-aircraft guns were needed to ward off the danger of an air force's attacking the vital locks of the canal.

In the case of both the canal and Hawaii the plans for their defense by the United States is a developing proposition, the aim being to keep on strengtheining them without calling for heavy appropriations at any one time. These tests made it possible to adjust and revise plans to meet every development in offensive tactics.

In regard to Hawaii the primary aim is to provide the navy with a secure base at the cross roads o fthe Pacific. With this base intact and our fleet in the Pacific, naval strategists assume that no enemy would risk an attack on the coast. The direct value of the islands as a base for offensive operations by an enemy lies, of course, in their geographical location two thousand miles from our coast, which is well within the radius of action of a hostile fleet. They are much closer to the canal than any other point that might be used as a base by an enemy in the Pacific.

This hub of the Pacific, the term used in military and naval parlance, lies 2,080 miles from San Francisco; 2,015 from the tip of Unalaska; 4,660 miles from the canal zone; $4,780 miles from Manila, and 3,440 miles from Yokohama.

Long before the World war and the Washington conference the strategic importance of the Hawaiian Islands had been recognized. Thus, Hamilton Fish, secretary of state, said in 1873:

"The Sandwich Islands (Hawaii) are an outpost fronting and commanding the whole of our possessions in the Pacific. Their transfer to a maritime power would threaten a military surveillance in the Pacific similar to that which Bermuda has afforded i nthe Atlantic."

The Toonerville Trolley That Meets All The Trains—By Fontaine Fox

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

O. O. McINTYRE

ON THE ATLANTIC, March 4.—All my life I have wanted to be in an ocean storm. It was not bravery. Merely a supreme faith that trans-Atlantic boats do pull through. Last night my ambition was realized. It was no sudden tempest. We rode in the teeth of a heavy gale before it broke.

With all the stoicism inbred in English seamen you sense disturbance. There is something taut and tight-lipped about them in an emergency. Nothing to them is "more than a bit of wind, sir." So the boat began to pitch, lunge and shiver.

Furniture, dishes and what-not skidded across the floor and back again. I improvised a strap for myself to hold me in bed. There were strange scurrying sounds down companionways and the soft patter of feet in halls. "Do you remember what I said about wanting a storm?" I said to my wife.

There was a feeble, "Yes." A dipping drop and then from me: "Well, I was just kidding." The door flew open with a mighty bang, lights went out and down the hall a baby began to cry. A 10 months old boy ill with tonsilitis, who will land at Plymouth for another 14-day journey to Capetown.

All night we were tossed about without sleep. The wind shrieked like the sirens on New York fire wagons. There were times when we seemed to poise for indeterminable minutes, like a toe dancer, on the crest of a wave and then that long despairing plunge.

I could not help but think of that lonely soul in the crow's nest—peering ahead into a world of snow like the white of eggs whipped to a creamy puff. There were many agonizing wails and cries for the ship's surgeon.

It grew worse toward morning. Yet there was a strange reaction. You begin not to care. We hold life dearly, but when we feel it is slipping away somehow we rise above our fears. If I were a religious person I should say: "That is God's way." At noon came calm.

In the hall I met an Englishman. "Gallant old girl!" he remarked.

"I'll say she is," I replied, and whistling walked out into the bright sunshine.

The ship's surgeon is a ruddy cheeked, powerfully built Englishman. When the storm began a young lady from New York was calling on us in our stateroom. A door crashed against her fingers gripped to a ledge. She grew white and slumped to the floor. The surgeon came and tried to examine the injured digits as the boat rolled. He seemed like a huge pacing bear in a cage as the boat swayed and rocked. He was on his way, he said, to perform an emergency operation in the steerage as the storm raged.

A storm completely disorganizes a ship so far as service goes. No one goes to the dining room and the effort to serve meals in rooms is a mighty task. Wet napkins are put on trays to hold dishes, yet when the food arrives it is a scrambled mess. For instance, I found a dish of succotash mixed up with my dessert. But I ate it just the same.

Every now and then a man from the wireless station plops into the lounge crying: "The following wireless messages have been received." He calls the moff with the enunciation of a subway guard and dashes out again. And a howl of laughter goes up.

There is a sweet-faced old lady and her white haired husband aboard. They are from the middle west. She calls him "Higbee." He calls her "Matilda." They are going to France to visit the grave of their grandson. It is pleasant to watch them thrilling to their first sea voyage. I thought of them quite a lot during the storm, too.

DINNER STORIES

The political boss of a small western city drove his buckboard at top speed down the main street on the morning of an election.

"Hey, Johnny!" he yelled to his son, "get down in the fourth ward, quick! There's people down there votin' as they blame please!"

He had advertised for a wife. Among the hundreds of answers one only interested him. The girl was the embodiment of all the domestic virtues and was considered beautiful by both sexes. The Nordic adventurer mailed his chosen applicant carfare to come the long distance to his town. With the check he enclosed a love letter throbbing with the endlessness of his devotion.

That night he re-read her letter. Her qualifications fulfilled his every wish. His anticipations were high. Then he noticed a little line on the next page. It said: "P. S.—As for my religion, I am a faithful member of the Baptist colored church."

A negro cook of middle age, who had saved considerable money, suddenly became engaged to a sporting man of her own race.

One morning her mistress saw her gazing abstractedly out of the kitchen window and inquired: "What's the matter, Hannah?"

"Well, mum," she replied, "with my husband-that-is-to-be everything goes with such lightnin' speed that I'm confused. Day before yesterday we got acquainted, yesterday we got engaged, and today I find he already owes me eighty-five dollars."

Irvin Cobb was a guest at a dinner party in New York where tablerapping and other phenomena were discussed.

"Are you a clairvoyant?" a woman asked Mr. Cobb.

"Not that I know of," he answered.

"Do you ever talk in your sleep?" she went on.

"No, but I often talk in other people's," he said. "I'm a Chautauqua lecturer."

At the funeral of the wealthy M. Veryrich a man wept bitterly.

"Why are you crying?" asked a reporter. "You are not a relative of Mr. Veryrich, are you?"

"No," sobbed the mourner, "that's it!"

NEWSY GOSSIP OF BIG CITIES

By COPELAND C. BURG.

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., March 4.—A woman can keep a secret!

She is Mrs. Lou Tellegen.

All Hollywood is marveling because Mrs. Tellegen, known on the stage as Nina Romano, a player in the "Whole Town's Talking" and formerly Isabel Craven Dilworth, daughter of a Philadelphia millionaire, was married to the famous stage and screen actor for more han a year before the world heard about it.

Geraldine Farrar, grand opera star, called Lou the "perfect lover." She was Tellegen's second wife.

"He is more than that," says Mrs. Tellegen III. "He is the perfect nurse. He loves to care for babies."

The Tellegens have a son, born in Florida. He is a strapping youngster and, although less than a year old, is almost ready to talk.

The subconscious tone of poetry brought Tellegen and his bride to a plane of romantic understanding.

Beaudelaire and his subtle rhymes gave the first movement to their love-making, Mrs. Tellegen believes.

"Poetry was the principal insrument which afforded a common bond of interest beween Lou and I," she said.

"A phrase from Beaudelaire or Arnold or Byron seemed to express the emotion we held for each other.

"Fis..ng and poetry and worms—strange things!

"All of our romance was not quoting poetry, of course.

"The 'poem complex,' you might say, had another side. We often went on fishing trips during the time we were on tour, and these were many common, every-day things that towered in importance above the works of great writers. For the time being a certain species of worm, which was especially good to use as bait for perch or trout, would be the principal topic of conversation. Beaudelaire would be forgotten—the worm would hold the stage, and it was just as interesting to me to discuss fishing bait with Lou as it was for us to quote 'Indian Love Lyrics' to one another."

Pola Negri is now known as "Lonesome Polo."

Since Rod La Rocque went to Paris she has been seen seldom in Hollywood haunts.

Miss Negri, however, is going to Paris herself right away.

She also will visit her native Poland.

"I am going to Paris to buy gowns," Miss Negri declared.

Mrs. Jack London is coming to Hollywood.

Mrs. London does not fully approve of the fashion in which some of her husband's books have been adapted for the screen and will herself personally supervise future productions.

Alma Rubens, who is geting a divorce, has taken to morbid literature. She is reading John Masefield's "Widow of Bye Street."

Tom Mix is now said to have succeeded Ruth Roland as Hollywood's richest person. He is making $15,000 weekly.

Mary Pickford is worried because her pictures are so widely copied. She plans an early production "de luxe."

William Beaudine, formerly Mary's property boy, will direct Miss Pickford in her next picture.

Mary's husband, Douglas Fairbanks, is crushed by the thought this his next picture may not exceed his last in "punch" and popularity.

Harold Lloyd is in the same boat. The public demands that his comedies be funnier each year, and the strain has shown its effects on the young comedian.

Nazimova feels she is abused. She failed in producing high-brow films, and her art, she believes, is above the "sweet young girls" pictures her directors insist on selecting for her.

Mabel Normand is suffering the penalty of adverse publicity. Whether her "antics" will ever again be screened is doubted by many.

MUSSOLINI'S ILLNESS

Wild rumors are cabled from Italy concerning the illness of Premier Mussolini.

He is said to be dying of hemorrhages caused by ulcers in the stomach.

Another rumor says the Italian crown prince shot Mussolini in a quarrel. That's nonsense, and it would be base ingratitude. But for Mussolini and his revolution on the side of conservatism, Italy might have had a revolution sweeping the king from the throne.

Another story bestows upon Mussolini a case of blood poisoning caused by a scratch from his pet lion. The Italian statesman, probably has influenza, like thousands of others in Europe.

MAN'S GREATEST WAR

Science says the greatest battle of the human race is to be against insects and microscopic germs.

Those tiny enemies do infinitely more harm than ever was done by all the wild beasts and poisonous reptiles that men have gradually conquered. Insects and plant pests destroy billions every year in crops and forests. And germs destroy millions of lives.

The influenza germ that prostrates you today, and kills you when it finds its way up through the sinus cavity into the brain is older than civilization.

In former times it has been infinitely more deadly even than toward the end of the great war, when it killed about eight million people.

However, man, having destroyed the mammoth and the rhinoceros, when he had only a sharpened flint to work with will know how to overcome his insect and microbe foes with all science working for him.

Recent discovery of a disinfectant harmless to man, yet 50 times more powerful than carbolic acid means more to the really important war of the human race than any discovery of T. N. T. or poison gas. The important war is the war against disease.

BRITISH SECURITY

Mr. Chamberlain, of the British cabinet, sends a notice to the entire diplomatic force of the British empire to this effect:

"Number one: And far ahead of all other things in British policies stands British security. Everything else is unimportant compared with that."

Sentimental Americans that would have this country enter the league of nations as a world cure-all, will please think over this passage from Chamberlain's memorandum.

"The only possible British policy is to consult the British interests, leaving the league of nations, at some future time, to develop into an instrument of international peace."

The American policy is to consider American interests.

THE QUEEN BOBS HER HAIR

The queen of Belgium bobbed her hair ,and there is much excitement. Kings and queens take up new ideas cautiously. The king of England still drives to the opening of parliament in a gilded coach drawn by six or eight cream-colored horses. And he wears a crown on state occasions, although everybody knows that the crown has long been the property of the house of commons. If Carlyle, creator of "Sartor Resaris," were here, he would find deep meaning in the queen's bobbed hair.

Bernard Shaw says he is retiring, leaving the writing of plays and other things to "younger men." The fact is that there are few men really younger than Shaw. While his work will outlive his body by a very short time, it is the most remarkable and brilliant of his period.

Anatole France, another Celt, and highly praised was by no means Shaw's equal.

Rear Admiral Sims says the flying machine has made the battleship obsolete. It has, and the submarine made the battleship almost obsolete, before the flying machine proved its power.

It is possible that fighting in the air may make war itself obsolete.

The great nobleman of the middle ages lost a good deal of their enthusiasm for war when the musket with powder and ball came into use, and their elaborate suits of armor no longer protected them.

NEW WORDS BY THE THOUSANDS

The publishers abandoned the printing plates which they formerly used in printing their dictionary, and now every old dictionary in this city should be discarded, as recent activities have brought additional new words into our language. Here is a newly compiled dictionary, larger and more complete than any similar one—all the new words—new special features—every line of it newly compiled—with an enlarged vocabulary—averaging more words to the page—and all at a trifling outlay that must mean nothing to one that wishes to keep abreast of the times. This enlarged new dictionary is now offered to readers through THE REVIEW TRIBUNE on the popular coupon plan, whereby coupon clippers will come into immediate possession of this highly prized volume.

Article No. 4

When we stop to think how well our ancestors got along with far fewer words, it would seem to discourage any attempt to enlarge our present vocabulary. But you must take into consideration the fact that there were fewer uses for words in those days. It was a slow moving world then—uneventful—plodding. It required many tiresome days to make things by hand that we now turn out in a few moments by modern machinery—and new inventions call for new words.

It was more than eight hundred years ago that our present language began to build itself, and upon rather a shaky foundation, at that. Even when Columbus sailed over to this side, which was more than four hundred years ago, very little progress had been made. Perhaps two hundred years will better mark the time when our present language would have been recognized in the spoken word of that time.

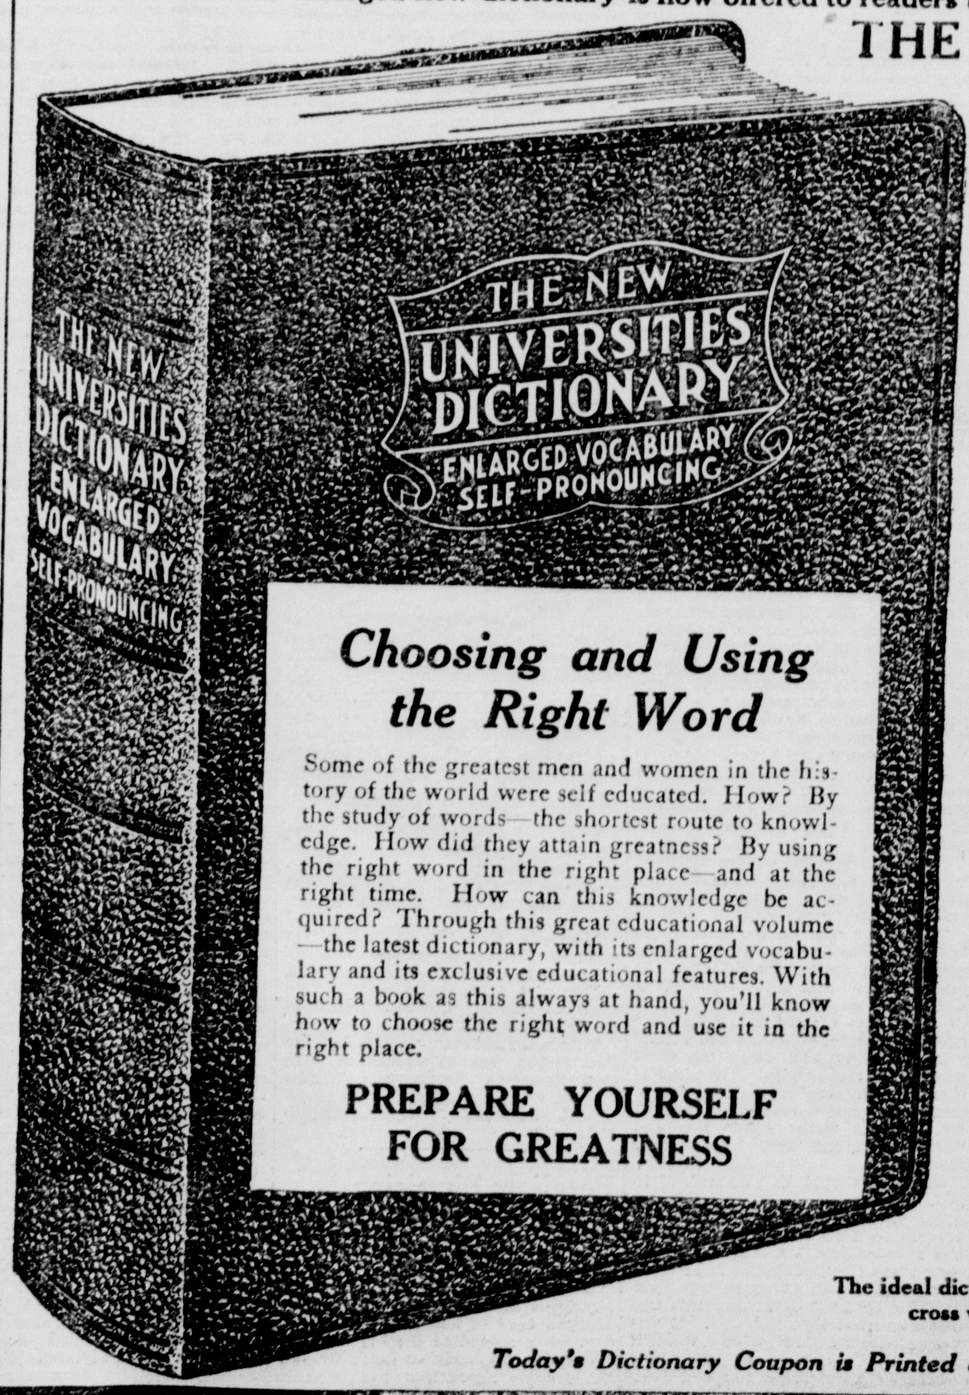

During those years we have passed through the age of great discoveries and inventions—all of which called for new words. Activities in science have brought their new words. Progress in every line of human endeavor has developed a need for new words. And now radio, aviation, and other inventions and discoveries, have been giving us more new words than we could comfortably take care of for the past year or two.

So you need a new dictionary to keep up with the times. But, when you go to buy one, ask when it was compiled. Find out if it really is new, or an ancient reprint. If it should happen to be a very old one with a few new words inserted and then reprinted with a recent date, it will not be worth the price, whatever it may be. It would be like buying a second-hand hat which was out of style years ago.

Fashions change in words and their meanings as they do in wearing apparel; and not to be familiar with the modern usage of words is like being a back number in the style of dress. You cannot afford to be known as one who is so far behind the times. Keep up with modern language through the dictionary that is newly compiled with an enlarged vocabulary.

And don't forget that it requires more than a new date to make an old dictionary modern.

REPORTS FROM STOCK MARKET

NEW YORK, March 4.—Further advances in prices of industrial stocks was halted by profit-taking in the early trading today. A number of active stocks were strong enough to move against the tide, particularly those in which there was short covering to be done. But selling pressure in the main bulk of industrial, equipment, motor and railroad stocks many of which had made an almost uninterrupted rise in the last ten days gradually forced prices down from one to three points.

The oils were sold quite heavily, while the railroad stocks held their ground. Occasional spurts in General Electric and other high priced industrial stocks helped to steady this section of the market, while new forward movements in United Alloy Steel, Ludlum Steel, North American, Utah Securities, Katy Common and Radio Corporation also improved the general tone of the industrial list.

Call money rates were posted at 4½ per cent; the grain markets opened reactionary and cotton was up about 15 points in the first hour.

All motor stocks were down and shipping, sugar and tobacco stocks reacted from the high levels of the first part of the week.

Dawes Takes Oath

marked the end of the sixty-eighth and the beginning of the sixty-ninth senate.

Senators-Elect Qualify.

Senators-elect, new and old, then marched to the well of the senate and were administered the oath by Dawes.

The senate chamber had been greatly transformed for the ceremonies. Replacing the easy arm chairs were stiff backed, cane-bottomed chairs placed upon every available spot of the floor.

The house was the first to arrive in the chamber for the ceremonies. A hush fell over the audience, which for hours ahead had waited in the galleries, when Carl Loeffler, deputy bookkeeper, appeared in the center door and announced:

"The speaker and members of the house of representatives."

Government Chiefs Present.

Members of the house filed in behind Speaker Gillette and took seats on the Democratic side of the aisles. Loeffler appeared again. This time he announced the "ambassadors extraordinary, ministers, plenipotentiary and charges d'affaires, of foreign countries."

Then followed President Coolidge's cabinet, the chief of staff, the chief of naval operations, the commandant of the marine corps and supreme court.

Coming direct from the vice president's room in the rear, Dawes was announced and took a seat on the rostrum beside Cummins.

The whisperings and animated buzzing died down suddenly. David S. Barry, sergeant-at-arms of the senate, appeared at the center door and announced:

"The chairman and members of the committee on arrangements and president-elect of the United States."

Distinguished Group in Galleries.

President Coolidge walked in slowly, going to a seat in front of the desk.

The assemblage arose and applauded.

A striking contrast to the sombre dress of those who occupied the floor was furnished by the bright garments of the hundreds of women who occupied the galleries. Red and lavender predominated in the color scheme of their dress.

The president and vice-president's galleries on the left of the chamber held a distinguished group, including the wives, family and friends of President Coolidge and Dawes. Also Will Hays, former postmaster-general, and George Harvey, former ambassador to Great Britain. Harvey frequently nooded to friends on the floor.

SENATE REJECTS WORLD COURT

WASHINGTON, Mar. 4.—The world court issue was flatly repudiated by the senate today when it voted to "table" a motion to consider a resolution providing for American adherence to the international tribunal.

The issue was raised by Senator King, (Democrat) of Utah, who offered a motion that the senate consider the adherence resolution in executive session. Senator Moses, Republican, of New Hampshire, irreconcilable leader, immediately moved to table King's motion and the senate overwhelmingly voted to do so. No record vote was taken.

Salineville Man Named Director of County Motor Club

Salineville members of the Columbiana County Motor club elected G. P. Williams as director at a meeting last evening.

Members, residing in the vicinity of Leetonia, named H. B. Arnold, published, on the board at a meeting Monday evening. Columbiana members will hold their meeting tonight, while a similar session will be held at Hanoverton on Friday night.

The board consisting of 13 members, three of whom are from East Liverpool, will meet in the city hall, Lisbon, Friday evening to elect officers.

Secretary E. M. Diehl announced that arrangements have been completed with the Salineville Motor club as the official automobile service station in that section of the county. This is the ninth county station, others being located at East Liverpool, Wellsville, Salem, Lisbon, East Palestine, Damascus, Hanoverton and Leetonia.

Dawes

demanding more than Germany could pay. Germany was mullish. The reparations controversy was at the root of the whole trouble. Secretary of State Hughes put forth a settlement feeler by proposing that American experts be sent abroad to determine how much Germany was capable of paying. It was a task that no European experts could perform because of the racial animosities and political hatreds that underlay the whole business.

The Hughes view ultimately prevailed and Dawes sent over as an unofficial expert to advise the Reparations Commission. He took with him Owen D. Young, one of the country's foremost economists, and a staff of assistants. The result was the Dawes Plan for settling the reparations dispute. It is now about eight months old and is functioning smoothly so far. Germany's obligations were scaled down to a point where she believed she could meet them; France withdrew her armies of occupation from German cities, and there was a general stabilization of conditions abroad.

No chronicle of Charles Gates Dawes' career could be complete without reference to the incident that gave him his nickname, "Hell an' Maria," which probably won for him more national renown overnight than he had secured in all of his other far-flung activities. It was the writer's good fortune to have been present and witness it.

"Hell an' Maria!"

The scene was a Congressional committee room; the time forenoon; the witness General Dawes.

A select committee of congress was engaged in investigating everything that came under the general heading of "War Frauds," and, specifically, was probing into charges that millions of dollars had been wasted in the purchase of war supplies, both here and abroad.

Serious charges had been made that the A. E. F. had been duped and bilked out of millions of dollars by unwise purchasing. It was said, among other things, that France had sold decrepit airplanes to the A. E. F. for ten times their value; that worn-out horses had been unloaded on the Americans at $400 a head—there were a thousand such charges, many of which were doubtless true, and some of which were untrue.

General Dawes had been the Chief Purchasing Agent for the A. E. F. He should know.

For some time the General answered questions put by congressmen who had fought the war from the trenches of Washington. He explained conditions, abroad, made excuses for this and that, and then he became impatient. His impatience gave way to choler and that to real, red-faced anger. He got up out of his chair.

"Hell an' Maria!" he shouted, "we weren't running a department store over there; we were trying to win a war. We had to have supplies, and, by God, we got them!"

Dominates Scene.

The whole atmosphere of the room changed in a twinkling. Before it has been the committee that dominated the assemblage. Now it was Dawes.

"What the hell did congress mean", he demanded, "going around 'pin-pricking' the victory won by American arms?

"We had a war on our hands," he told the committee; "We couldn't quibble and haggle around over the price of shells and beans when shells and beans were scarce, and we had to have them for the men whose existence depended on shells and beans"

He raged up and down the room waving his stubby pipe. The air was blue. Real, smokey oaths sputtered from him in a never-ending procession. It was "what in'ell' this and "damn" that, and 'by God." the other thing.

Congress should be ashamed of itself, he exploded. Here was the end of the greatest war of all time—a war brought to a successful conclusion by the heroism and suffering of Americans three thousand miles from home and supplies and Congress was "pin-pricking around" over what this had cost and what that had cost. It was a disgrace, by God! that's what it was.

"We were fighting a war and dodging shells. D'de think we were a lot of bookkeepers over there? D'ye think we had time to account for every damned cent we spent? D'ye think we had time to put it down in a book every time we sent a bag of coffee or a pound of meat into the lines?"

"Bawls Out" Cabinet.

The committee was taken somewhat off its feets. Several members attempted feeble expostulation that the Corporal was misunderstanding the purpose and scope of the investigation. But the General waved them down and went on. Some of the women spectators tittered and began nervous preparations to leave the room. But they changed their minds and stayed—and seemed to enjoy it.

The afternoon papers that day carried pretty complete accounts of what the General had said, and more editorials were written about it than any other incident of the session.

Overnight General Dawes became "Hell an' Maria" Dawes to the whole country. The picture of the General stamping up and down the committee room, shaking his fist and roaring "Hell an' Maria!" at Congressmen apparently tickled the American sense of humor. At any rate, General Dawes found himself almost famous and certainly nationally renowned over night. It is one of the oddities of American life that the General thus became a nation-wide figure through a little picturesque profanity rather than by his numerous achievements in the business, financial and musical world.

President Harding afterward made him Director of the Budget and his career as Director of that institution was marked by similar explosive, but always effective, profanity.

He "bawled out" Cabinet officers in public for slip-shod business methods of expenditure in their departments. He cracked the whip over bureau heads who drew $3,500 in salary and who were responsible for the expenditure of perhaps $35,000,000 in Government funds.

Investigate Dental Office Robbery in East Palestine

East Palestine police today are without clue to the identity of the culprits, who looted the dental offices of Dr. O. E. Stanton, in the Bott building, North Market street. Gold leaf and dental instruments, estimated to be worth several hundred dollars, were taken.

The dentist, who makes his home in Salem, discovered the theft when he returned to East Palestine Monday. The lock in the main office door had been jimmied.

The insurance company, with whom the dentist carried burglary insurance, has sent a detective to East Palestine to make an investigation.

Leetonia Pastor Will be Speaker at Kiwanis Luncheon

Rev. H. C. Brillhart, pastor of the St. Paul's Lutheran church, at Leetonia, will be the speaker at the luncheon meeting of the Kiwanis club to be held at the Larkins Annex, Market street, tomorrow.

Members of the "Red" team in last spring's attendance contest will be guests of the "Blues." The "Reds," in charge of J. Clair Smith, were victors over the "Blues," who were captained by Dr. James T. Jackson.

This week's meeting will be the first in the year's attendance contest. President Lewis will outline plans for the contest.

A. E. Harris will furnish the attendance prize.

Bergholz Physician Drops Dead as he Calls on Patient

Dr. W. R. Malone, 70, a practicing physician at Bergholz, for 35 years, dropped dead of heart trouble yesterday, while seated at the bedside of a patient in the home of Peter Groves. Dr. Malone apparently had been in good health. He was a bachelor.

SIDELIGHTS ON INAUGURAL

BY H. K. REYNOLDS

WASHINGTON, Mar. 4.—They had to put an extra leaf in the White House breakfast table this morning. There was quite a family party. Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge, of course, soon to drive a mile up Pennsylvania avenue to sign a four year lease on the old John Adams homestead on the Potomac. Then there was Col. John C. Coolidge of Plymouth, Vt. The president's father. Mrs. Almira Goodhue of Northampton, Mass., Mrs. Coolidge's mother. John Coolidge, the president's only son, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Stearns of Boston, and a few other intimate friends.

This was a proud day for Frank Stearns, the man who is credited with "discovering" Calvin Coolidge and pushing him along the hard road to political success and national eminence. Reports that the president was "off of" Stearns because he confirmed the "hobby horse" story were apparently discredited by the Bostonian's presence at the White House today.

It only took the president about a quarter of an hour to get through his inaugural address. He had promised a short one and it was. Perhaps he took a leaf out of the book of Wm. Henry Harrison, whose inaugural address occupied more than an hour in delivery despite a sleet storm which drove most of the inaugural crowd to cover and a warm fireside. William Henry stuck it out, however, went back to the executive mansion with a fever, went promptly to bed and died a month later.

John W. Davis didn't stay in town to see Coolidge inaugurated, although he was here yesterday to appear before the supreme court. "Aren't you going to stay, John?" a friend asked. "No", said the ex-Democratic candidate. "I wasn't invited."

Evidently William Jennings Bryan thought that he was not invited either, for he had not shown up at a late hour and his favorite hotel said he had made no reservation for the inaugural period. A Republican inauguration is wormwood and then some to W. J. B.

Of all the state governors in the Capital today—and there are more than a score of them—the most popular and the most sought after was Nellie Taylor Ross of Wyoming, the first woman state executive in the United States. Mrs. Ross is a guest of Senator and Mrs. John B. Kendrick of Wyoming.

General Dawes says he didn't know he had so many relatives. At least one third of his visitors at the Willard have been kin folks, all wanting good seats in the inaugural stand at the Capitol. The General ran out of tickets a long time ago, but he offered his best wishes and hoped they would get to see the parade.

All the orchestras in town are playing the General's 'Melody in A", this week and it will be rendered tonight at the inaugural ball at the Mayflower hotel. The vice president and Mrs. Dawes will represent the Coolidges at this affair. They will remain at the White House.

Everyone has his own idea about the size of the inaugural crowd this year. There are lots of strangers in town—probably forty-thousand or so—but the crowd is nothing like that record breaking throng which gathered here a dozen years ago for the first inauguration of Woodrow Wilson. It was estimated at something over a hundred thousand.

GUTZON BORGLUM IS INDICTED

DECATUR, Ga., March 4.—Gutzon Borglum, noted sculptor, today was indicted by the DeKalb county grand jury on three counts, charging him with malicious mischief and larceny from a house, following his destruction of working models for the Confederate memorial he had been carving on Stone Mountain, near here.

Only one of the offenses—that of larceny from a house—is a felony under Georgia law.

ble, damaging Diamond alley buildings, Fire Chief Bryan and Safety Director Anderson ordered that it be razed immediately. The sidewalk in front of the structure has been fenced off to prevent injury to pedestrians.

Work of clearing away the fire ruins is proceeding slowly owing to adverse weather conditions. As soon as the fire adjusters complete settlements, the work will be speeded up so that actual building operations may be started early in the spring.

The fire inquiry is practically closed. However, D. J. Connor Youngstown, and T. Hayes White, Toronto, deputy fire marshals, are still in the city.

Redecorate Store Room.

The Church of the Nazarene today vacated the old K. & M. dollar store room, Fifth street, which has been leased by Moyer Brothers pending the reconstruction of the Wasbutzky building. Painters and carpenters are now at work on the interior of the building, redecorating and building counters and shelving. The room will be ready for occupancy within ten days or two weeks.

The Nazarene church has transferred its revival campaign to the Anderson Methodist Episcopal church, West Ninth street, where services will be held every night this week and next week. Evangelist Ellis, of Bethany, Oklahoma, who is in charge of the campaign, will preach on "The Second Coming of Christ" tonight, the third of his series of sermons dealing with the book of Revelations.

mock, across the alley from the Pauley building, was scorched.

Bennett's car was insured, but Pauley carried no insurance on his garage, his loss being about $300 and that on the car about $1,200.

A three-room house occupied by Ray Rollins, Shadyside avenue, was destroyed early yesterday afternoon when it was fired by an overheated stove. The loss was covered by insurance.

The firemen were called to the home of Mrs Nora Ammon, Trentvale street, by a chimney fire about 11:30 o'clock this morning. There was no damage.

DEATH ROLL

Mrs. Dorothy Ellslager

Mrs. Dorothy Ellslager, 74 years old, died yesterday afternoon in her home in Kountz avenue following a short illness of complications.

The body was sent on the noon train today to Pittsburgh where burial will be made.

White Infant

Funeral services for the infant child of Rev. and Mrs. George White, of Lincoln avenue, Wellsville, who died Monday, were held yesterday afternoon. Burial was made in Spring Hill cemetery.

All Pageantry

with all the world and business prosperity at home.

Calm Review of Conditions.

His inaugural speech, short in keeping with the whole ceremony, was a calm, dispassionate review of existing conditions, delivered by a clam, dispassionate man.

He spoke of the need for American co-operation abroad, within the boundaries of non-involvement in Europe's petty politics prescribed by Washington. He spoke in favor of frequent international conferences to settle world problems. He endorsed again the world court and the settlement of justiciable questions by justiciable methods, but "we are determined," he said, "not to become involved in the political controversies of the old world."

"We believe," he said, "that we can best serve our country and most successfully discharge our obligation to humanity by continuing openly and candidly, intensely and scrupulously American. If we have any destiny it has been in that direction."

Deals With Twin Policies.

Turning with equal candor to domestic questions, Mr. Coolidge served blunt notice that under his leadership, a leadership conferred by a majority of 1,000,000 votes, the Republican party will be a disciplined party, and a party willing to accept responsibility for its acts.

With unmistakable meaning, he referred to the November election. Endorsed the expulsion from the party of those insurgents who declined to support the Republican candidates and the Republican platform and declared there is no place under the party banner for those unwilling to "assume sufficient responsibility and exhibit sufficient loyalty to co operate in support of the broad, general principles of the party platform.

The people, he said, turned thumbs down in November on meddling with the constitution and the courts, and on government ownership of railroads and utilities. Hence, he proclaimed, the country can look for none of this under his administration.

Mr. Coolidge dwelt vigorously with the twin policies of his administration —government economy and reduction of taxes.

Gala Occasion

While the ceremonies that inducted Mr. Coolidge into his high office today were the simplest in many decades, not even his orders and wishes could keep the occasion from being a gala one.

Once more historic old Pennsylvania avenue resounded to the clatter of cavalry, the rumble of artillery caissons and the measured tread of infantry on the march. And a new note was throwing into today's brief pageant by the lumbering, hissing presence of a battalion of tanks.

Seven thousand troops of all arms consituted the inaugural parade and the governors of nearly a score of states, north, south, east and west, participated in the march from the capitol to the White House, passing in review before its great portals and again give physical evidence of the solidarity of the American commonwealths.

The president's escort to the senate consisted of one troop of the third cavalry, one troop of mounted and an honor guard of eight G. A. R. veterans.

The troops formed in the vicinity of the capitol while the plaza ceremonies were in progress and at their conclusion and as soon as the president had left the head of the procession moved down the hill and broke into the broad expanse of the avenue.

Vast Crowd Present

On the west plaza afront the capitol a crowd of scores of thousands was assembled. From the east steps of the Capitol to the congressional library people were packed to sardine-tightness. Muffled in furs and overcoats the vast throng shifted restlessly while waiting for the president to emerge from the senate chamber.

The marine band resplendent in scarlet coats and much gold braid was placed directly beneath the president's stand. It played patriotic airs to assuage the restlessness of the throng.

Estimates of the number of people within range of the president's voice, carried afar through the loud speakers varied widely, but among the lowest was 100,000. From the president's stand 15 feet above the level it looked as though the throng would have filled the Yale bowl twice over.

Mrs. Dawes Wears Blue.

The proceedings were slightly delayed by the slowness of the distinguished guests to leave the senate chamber and get their seats out in the cold March sunshine. The aisles leading into the diplomatic and cabinet sections were choked with high hats and expensive furs.

A few minutes before 1 o'clock the members of the supreme court of the United States, led by Chief Justice Taft, walked down the center steps, raising the first scattering applause.

Mrs. Coolidge in grey, and Mrs. Dawes, in blue, next appeared and the applause increased.

Immediately behind them came the president and vice president.

The band struck up "Hail to the Chief" and the military snapped to salute.

Delivers Address From Manuscript.

From this time on the proceedings moved with despatch.

While a breathless hush fell over the great assemblage there boomed the voice of Chief Justice Taft, clear as a bell.

"Do you solemnly swear to ——"

The President's "I do," could scarcely be heard.

He leaned forward slightly, kissed the open Bible—the same one which he used as a small boy in learning to read.

He pronounced the oath at 1:02 p. m.

Then without more ado, he turned, faced his audience and began his speech. His voice carried well to every section of the extensive concourse and he was accorded perfect attention.

He delivered his address from manuscript, bare headed and overcoated.

Southern Railway of England will be completely electrified by July.

Henry W. Savage's Musical Comedy Scores Big Hit Before Capacity Audience at Ceramic Theatre Here.

The season's best show!

This was the verdict of East Liverpool theatre-goers who taxed the capacity of the Ceramic theatre last night, when Henry W. Savage's latest musical comedy success, "Lollipop," was presented.

Dainty Ada May Weeks, who prefers the shorter name, Ada May, and is so listed in the program, captivated the audience by her singing, clever dancing and general attractiveness. She is a star in every sense of the term and from rise of the curtain in the first act until the finale in the third she was repeatedly encored, as were the members of the supporting company.

Because of the general excellence of the cast, comprising 60 persons, it would require too much space to refer to individuals other than Miss Weeks. But it suffices to say that East Liverpool has not witnessed a better musical comedy in the last five years. The catchy music, snappy dancing, excellent chorus, beautiful scenery—in fact, everything that makes a good show—was included in the production.

Manager William Tallman of the Ceramic made no mistake in booking "Lollipop."

Nation's Chieftain

less those who are elected under the same party designation are willing to assume sufficient responsibility and exhibit sufficient loyalty, so they can co-operate in support of the broad general principles of the party, the election is merely a mockery."

Clear Mandate.

Then, referring in the same indirect manner to La Follette's platform of a curb on the judiciary and government ownership, he said:

"This Administration has come into power with a very clear and definite mandate from the people.

"The expression of the popular will in favor of maintaining our constitutional guarantees was overwhelming and decisive. There was such a manifestation of faith in the integrity of the courts that we can consider that issue rejected for some time to come. Likewise the policy of public ownership of railroads and certain electric utilities met with unmistakable defeat."

The president chose to divide his brief address into two parts. He spoke first of America's relations to the rest of the world, and he declared that "we can best serve our own country and discharge our obligations to humanity by being openly and candidly, intensely and scrupulously American."

America's Duty.

It is America's duty, being strong, he declared, to set the world an example in moderation of armament, and, in the spirit of fair play and justice, to rest her cause before the world on arbitration and reason rather than force. He specifically endorsed the conference idea in settling international problems, and he hinted that conferences can be expected under his administration.

In conformity with this principle, he said, America should adhere to the World Court, as a practical exhibition of American willingness to subscribe to justiciable procedure in the settling of international disputes.

But, he declared, the United States can contribute most to the peace and security and stability of the world by "maintaining our position of political detachment and independence."

"This position," he said, should be be made more and more clear in our relations with all foreign countries. We are at peace with all of them. Our program is never to oppress, but always to assist.

"We have made great contributions to the settlement of contentious differences in both Europe and Asia. But there is a very definite point beyond which we cannot go. We can only help those who help themselves.

Home Problems.

From this dealing with international affairs on a broad, general plane, the president turned to home problems. These he dealt with in the same manner, stressing always the need for less taxes, more enforcement of existing laws and non-interference by the government with legitimate business.

The collection of more taxes than are absolutely required to run an orderly, efficient government, he said, was simply a "species of legalized larceny."

"The time is arriving," he declared, "when we can have further tax reduction, when we must have tax reform."

"The method of raising revenues ought not to impede business; it ought to encourage it. I am opposed to extremely high rates, because they produce little or no revenue, because they are bad for the country, and, finally, because they are wrong.

"We cannot finance the country, we cannot improve social conditions through any system of injustice, even if we attempt to inflict it on the rich.

Correct Course.

"The wise and correct course to follow in taxation and all other economic legislation is NOT to destroy those who have already secured success, but to create conditions under which everyone will have a better chance to be successful.

"The verdict of the country has been given on this question. We shall do well to heed it."

Turning from taxation to law enforcement. Mr. Collidge appealed to the nation for better observance of existing laws. While he did not mention specifically the prohibition laws, it was evident that he had these in mind.

HIGHLIGHTS OF CHIEF'S SPEECH

WASHINGTON, March 4—President Coolidge's brief inaugural address, one of the shortest on record, bristled with epigrams today.

Some of the more pungent follow:

"We can best serve our country and humanity by being Americans."

"If we expect others to rely on our fairness and justice we must show that we rely on fairness and justice."

"We can only help those who help themselves."

"With us a treaty of peace means peace, and a treaty of amity means amity."

"Our program is never to oppress, but always to assist."

"There is no salvation in a narrow and bigoted partisanship."

"Economy is idealism in its most practical form."

"The wisest and soundest method of solving our tax problem is through economy."

"The collection of any taxes not absolutely required is only a species of legalized larceny."

"Under this Republic the rewards of industry belong to those who earn them."

"This country believes in prosperity."

"The result of economic dissipation to a nation is always moral decay."

"Our problem is not to secure new advantages, but to maintain those which we already possess."

"In a Republic the first rule for the guidance of the citizen is obedience to law."

"While there may be those of high intelligence who violate the law at times the barbarian and the defective always violate it."

"The essence of a Republic is representative government."

"The fundamental precept of liberty is toleration."

"The first rule for the guidance of a citizen is obedience to law," he said.

Law Violators.

"While there may be those of high intelligence who violate the law at times, the barbarian and the defective always violate it. Those who disregard the rule of society . . . are treading the way that leads back to the jungle."

The president terminated his brief address with a plea for toleration—"the fundamental precept of liberty."

"Here stands our country," he concluded, "an example of tranquility at home, a patron of tranquility abroad. Here stands its government, aware of its might, but obedient to its conscience.

"America seeks no earthly empire built on blood and force.

"No ambition, no temptation lures her to thought of foreign dominions. The legions which she sends forth are armed, not with the sword, but with the cross. The higher state to which she seeks the allegiance of all mankind is not of human but of divine origin.

"She cherishes no purpose save to merit the favor of Almighty God."

New Cumberland Floor Teams Capture Hard Fought Games.

Chester High school basketball teams dropped two games last night to the New Cumberland squads in games played at the county seat. The boys lost by a score of 25 to 21, while the girls were forced down to defeat by a score of 24 to 17.

Both games were stubbornly contested with the local teams making strong bids for victory. They were unable, however, to overcome the leads of their opponents and rivals for the county championship.

Pinney was high scorer for the local boys with five field goals. Campbell, Pinney and Williams were the other locals to score from the field. Tuttle and Myers were both forced out of the game on personal fouls and were replaced by Williams and Haskinson. Huff and Beaumont were the leading scorers for New Cumberland with the former landing five double deckers.

Miss Paisley starred for Chester girls with seven field goals and one foul. Miss McCoy made the other double marker for the locals. Miss Edmunds with seven goals and Miss Householder with four field goals carried off scoring honors for the winners.

NEW MAN IS CREATED FROM WORN-OUT BODY

Only Thirty Minutes Sleep a Day Insufficient for Proper Rest—Ka-di-ok Removed the Cause.

W. C. FORTNER,
Huntington, W. Va.

Thirty minutes sleep a day would be declared insufficient for any person to provide the needed rest for the body, but this is what W. C. Fortner, a hotel clerk of Huntington, W. Va., residing at the Third Street hotel, was up against. And it is no wonder that his body was almost completely worn out, that he had no appetite, did not feel like work at all. Accompanying all these distressing and painful conditions, to augment his illness, were indigestion, constipation, nervousness, headaches and dizzy spells, with occasional complaints from his kidneys and liver.

But he's all right now. He took Ka-di-ok. He informed the Ka-di-ok representative that after taking two bottles of Ka-di-ok, he feels more like working, sleeps like a log, and feels like a new man. He has no more indigestion, good appetite, nervousness has all left him, his kidneys and liver have cleared up and are acting fine, and, more wonderful than all, has gained 12 pounds weight in two weeks. He is now a booster for Ka-di-ok and recommends it to all his friends.

This is why Ka-di-ok has so many friends: Because it does the work claimed for it, and when the job is completed, there are no comebacks, the effects are lasting, and everybody's happy.

Ka-di-ok is sold and recommended in East Liverpool by Mathews Cut Rate Medicine Store, 129 W. 6th street.

More Athletics For Japanese Maids Is Urged by Heathens

TOKIO—Maids of Japan need more exercise, according to health experts. Statistics show that Japanese women are physically inferior to women of other countries, due chiefly to the fact that they do not indulge in regular forms of exercise nor participate to any great extent in sports. Accordingly a movement has been launched to interest Japanese school girls in running, jumping, swimming, gymnastics and other kinds of physical exercise in the hope of building up a more robust Japanese womanhood.

Charcoal Braziers Passing.

Prior to the war, the charcoal brazier in Paris was an institution. It was a common sight to see loungers at the cafes on the sidewalks toasting their shins before the charcoal embers while drinking hot grog. The advent of electric heaters has so changed the custom that this picturesque vendor of comfort is rapidly passing. The electric heaters are hung overhead and reflect the heat to the sidewalk.

AWAIT DIVISION OF ROAD FUNDS

Highway Projects Held up Pending Word From Capital.

No time has been designated by the State Highway Department when the 1925-26 appropriation of state and federal road funds will be divided, the State Highway Department has advised the county commissioners.

It has been proposed by the commissioners that a conference be held with the director of the highway department regarding an appropriation of these funds for Columbiana county within the next month or so. There are a number of proposed road projects pending in this county on which nothing can be done until some advice is received from Columbus as to how much state and federal aid it is possible to obtain for the county.

BEWARE THE COUGH OR COLD THAT HANGS ON

Chronic coughs and persistent colds lead to serious lung trouble. You can stop them now with Creomulsion, an emulsified creosote that is pleasant to take. Creomulsion is a new medical discovery with twofold action; it soothes and heals the inflamed membranes and kills the germ.

Of all known drugs, creosote is recognized by the medical fraternity as the greatest healing agency for the treatment of chronic coughs and colds and other forms of throat and lung troubles. Creomulsion contains, in addition to creosote, other healing elements which soothe and heal the inflamed membranes and stop the irritation and inflammation, while the creosote goes on to the stomach, is absorbed into the blood, attacks the seat of the trouble and destroys the germs that lead to consumption.

Creomulsion is guaranteed satisfactory in the treatment of chronic coughs and colds, bronchial asthma, catarrhal bronchitis and other forms of throat and lung diseases, and is excellent for building up the system after colds or the flu. Money refunded if any cough or cold, no matter of how long standing, is not relieved after taking according to directions. Ask your druggist. Creomulsion Co., Atlanta, Ga. (Adv.)

WHEN BACK HURTS FLUSH OUT KIDNEYS

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes, and lemon juice, combined with litha, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; can not injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache. By all means have your physician examine your kidneys at least twice a year.

68TH CONGRESS PASSES AFTER STORMY CAREER

Uncovered Scandals; Two Cabinet Officers Forced Out.

INTERNAL FIGHTS

Clashed With Two Presidents During Sixteen Months.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—The Sixty-eighth congress ended its meteoric career today, after sixteen months of turbulent politics.

Serving with two presidents of the United States and constantly at war with the White House, the Sixty-eighth congress wrote upon the pages of time a record replete with sensations. It unearthed the naval oil scandals, drove two Cabinet members into retirement and rode roughshod over the executives on virtually every great legislative issue.

It was a congress of warring factions of the late Warren G. Harding and later with those of Calvin Coolidge. It varied its program of warfare by occasional internal fights and clashes now and then between its own two branches.

This record resulted chiefly from a coalition between Democratic forces and a small group of Republican insurgents in both branches who paid allegiance to Senator Robert M. La Follette, of Wisconsin. The coalition, gaining a majority through the Insurgent "balance of power," rode harshly over the administration's program when ever it desired and administered a successive series of defeats to both Harding and Coolidge policies.

Forced Inquiries.

By using their combined forces, soon after the congress met in December, 1923, the Democrats and Insurgents forced the most amazing series of governmental investigations ever attempted by a congress. The oil-lease scandal headed the list, but it also included an inquiry into the conduct of the department of Justice, the Internal Revenue Bureau, campaign slush funds, propaganda, the railroads and a half dozen other subjects. These investigations were conducted by senate committees, and for months the sensational revelations afforded the nation its principal topic of conversation.

The Presidential election intervened, and Congress adjourned early in June, 1924, to attend the political conventions. The scandals were one of the chief issues thrust into the following election and, to the surprise of Congress, played but little part in the result.

When the second session was convened in December, 1924, Congress switched a soft pedal on investigations, although in its closing hours a new flurry was experienced. This led to authorizing a series of investigations of government bureaus, but dealt with such commonplace subjects as cotton, gasoline, bread and electricity.

The oil-lease inquiry made Senator Thomas J. Walsh (D.,) of Montana, a national figure. It was Walsh who persisted in his investigation of the leases until it was revealed that Edward L. Doheny, California oil magnate, had loaned former Secretary of the Interior Albert B. Fall $100,000 just before the Elk Hills lease was effected. He also brought out the fact that Harry F. Sinclair, lessee of Teapot Dome, had taken Fall into his employ immediately after getting his lease.

These revelations produced such a public clamor that Congress authorized President Coolidge to employ special counsel to cancel the leases and recover the oil properties for the Government. Litigation to this end is still pending in the Federal courts.

Denby Forced Out.

The oil investigation, while having little permanent political effect, did have its immediate material results. It drove Secretary of the Navy Edwin J. Denby out of the cabinet. A resolution, demanding his resignation, was passed by the Senate in February, 1924, by a vote of 51 to 25. A week later Denby's resignation was announced by the President.

The Department of Justice investigation had a similar result in that it forced the resignation of Attorney-General Harry M. Daugherty. This investigation, incidentally grew out of the move to oust Denby, as a similar resolution was immediately sponsored, demanding Daugherty's resignation. When Administration leaders called for a hearing on charges of incompetency leveled at Daugherty, a committee of inquiry was authorized. This brought Senator Burton K. Wheeler (D.) of Montana, into the picture.

Wheeler conducted the investigation, and in the testimony that followed it was charged that officials of the department had been bribed by bootleggers and that Daugherty had played "favorites" in enforcing the law. At the height of these revelations President Coolidge called for Daugherty's resignation. It was given.

Subsequently a counter-attack was launched on Wheeler by men employed by the National Republican Committee. The charges were followed by Wheeler's indictment by a Federal Grand Jury in Montana and an independent investigation of charges by a special Senate committee. This committee, headed by Senator Borah (R.) of Idaho, completely exonerated Wheeler, and the Senate adopted the report by a vote of 56 to 5, but a new Attorney-General, Harlan F. Stone, went ahead with the case, which is still pending.

Makes Friends of Stomach Enemies

How Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets Revive Your Old Time Friendships with Mince Pie and Sausage.

Nothing more contributes to make a man sure of himself than to get back into his old time stride of fearless eating. He takes one or two Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. No gassiness, no sour risings, no indigestion whatever. He eats his goulash with relish. A wedge of mince pie hits the high spots of satisfaction. He plays with pork and beans and never a come back.

The reason for all this is the alkaline effect which these tablets give the stomach. Digestion is aided and thus instead of a souring mixture so often the effect after eating, the stomach is sweet, active and comfortable. Get a 60 cent box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at any drug store and then invite the old timers back to the table.

MANY HOUSEKEEPERS TOO ILL TO WORK

MRS. EMIL O. BRANDENBURG
651 37TH STREET, MILWAUKEE, WISCONSIN

Milwaukee, Wisconsin.—"I was in a badly run-down condition and I would get weak spells and terrible headaches. I felt so badly last year that I could not do any housecleaning. The minute I would lift or stoop it seemed as if I was going to fall to pieces. I told a neighbor how I felt and she said that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was surely the right thing for me. I took four bottles then and in the fall of the year I took three. I had been treated by a doctor, but he gave me an iron tonic and that did not help me. It seemed that the tonic did not have in it what the Vegetable Compound did. That gave me the strength and ambition I needed and I have gained in weight. This year before I started to clean house I got four bottles of the Vegetable Compound and am taking it right along. I tell all my friends about it and how much good it does me. They can notice it because I have gained in weight. I weigh 118 now and do all my work myself again."—Mrs. EMIL O. BRANDENBURG, 651 37th Street, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Mrs. Earl's Recovery

Horace, Nebraska.—"I had terrible pains and backache, so bad that I could hardly move, and I would have to lie down at times. I read advertisements of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I was so sick that I thought I would try it. My husband knew it was good as he knew a woman it had helped. It took all my pains away and I don't have any backache now. I do my own housework, take care of a few chickens and my garden, and have a little girl three years old to look out for. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to my friends and I will answer all the questions I can, if any one writes to me."—Mrs. ADA EARL, Box 28, Horace, Nebraska.

THE DOUBLE HOUSE

By Elizabeth Dejeans

Elaine Dascome seemed to have returned to life with no very clear understanding of the past and with vague ideas as to the future. As a child, she had been very gentle and submissive, entirely biddable, until the tiny spot of irritation in her brain had aroused her to an irrational activity. It had given to her the exotic charm which had captured Dascome, and the wild irritability of her worst moments which had worked havoc in their lives. Now, she seemed to feel nothing acutely; she was simply a child of very moderate intelligence grown a little older; a clinging, affectionate child-woman, very pathetic in her complete trust an obedience; very like Mary Bliss deprived of haunting fear and with a somewhat vague memory restored. She seemed to regard Dascome much as, when she was a child, she had regarded her father—he would care for her always. The most pronounced thing about her was her delight in Clarice. she would listen by the hour to Clarice's tales of the studio. "When my face is well, I'll come and see you act," she told Clarice. Occasionally she had flashes of intelligence. Once she said to Dascome, "I'm only a little over forty, John, but in my body I feel the way I look. Even if my face is made to look better, I shall feel like an old woman, not as when you married me. I am so sorry."

"You're my dear little invalid wife, Elaine. Don't bother about me—think of that beautiful child you gave me. She'll have beautiful children some day. We'll be grandparents and have the right to feel old and experienced."

The nurse chanced to overhear this and she told another nurse. "I just went out and cried. They're p'tiful, those two. Why, he's only forty-three—young yet. She doesn't half realize, still she does more thinking that she's given credit for—poor little soul! And he's gone right down these last weeks—he'd better have a doctor for himself."

Clarice came to see Karesia often. From the freedom of her confidences, it was evident that she had no suspicion of Karesia's heartache. Clarice had begun to realize. "It is hard for father," she told Karesia sadly. "He is so gentle and kind to mother, but I can tell, his love died long ago—I mean the way a man loves a woman. He's sick with pity for her—all day long. He looks so ill. He's getting gray. I can see that everything's an effort to him—just his will keeps him going. I wonder sometimes, too, whether there isn't someone whom he loves and this has ended it all."

Rossiter spoke his mind very positively. "I tell you, Kara, it's too much for him. I'm sorry for her, but there is such a thing as common sense! She doesn't really need him—not the sacrifice he is making. If she freed him, let him marry you, she wouldn't miss him, so long as she had affectionate care. He's about the finest thing in the shape of a man I've ever known! My hope is that she'll grow intelligent enough to realize, and do the kind thing."

"I wouldn't stand for it!" Karesia exclaimed. "And he would never do it. Never! It would be forsaking his helpless wife!"

Karesia had grown pitifully white and agitated; Rossiter was afraid to tell her how alarmed he was about Dascome. He told her, "Ive talked business with Dascome a good deal lately. He's willing that Clarice should sign up with us. He advises her putting some of her money into our concern. I have been holding off with our big picture until she can give her time to it."

It was a relief to Karesia that Dascome could "talk business." Evidently Rossiter saw much of Clarice. They had not told her so, but she decided that they were engaged. Dascome would see to it that Clarice would be very valuable to Rossiter; not a wife to be lightly regarded; in reality, Randsome Rossiter's partner—a working partner.

Karesia herself could do no work; she had the numb feeling that she was waiting for an upheaval of some sort, some desperate distress that would drive her to her typewriter because it would be the only thing left in life. All these weeks and she had not heard Dascome's voice once—and he had not written to her! She understood; he was afraid he would go under, break; John Dascome was afraid of himself. He had said, "It's beyond me. You'll understand—and forgive me?"

WHO'S WHO

CAPTAIN WILLIAM BEEBE.

The Arcturus, a war-built wooden ship, Captain William Beebe commanding, which sailed from Tebo's basin, foot of Twenty-third street, Brooklyn, recently, is one of the strangest fishing expeditions ever known.

With a large equipment of traps, hooks, nets and dredges the Arcturus will visit the Sargasso sea, a vast floating continent of seaweed that lies between Cuba and African in the middle Atlantic ocean.

Below the surface of the Sargasso sea are strange monsters, whose like, according to marine tradition, has never been seen on sea or land. The scientific explanation for this is that millions of fish are caught in the net of seaweed and their decaying carcasses serve as carrion for undersea life, varieties of which exist in no other spot on the globe.

These are queer phosporescent creatures that flash and glimmer in the shadowed depths. Some are said to be illuminated with red, yellow and green lights like a Staten Island ferryboat. Octopuses 100 feet in diameter, capable of dragging a small vessel under the water, are said to roam this region. In ancient times the place was dreaded by sailors as a supernatural and haunted spot.

It has never been thoroughly explored. The Arcturus will move slowly through the seaweed collecting specimens. The expedition is backed by the department of tropical research of the New York Zoological society. Marshal Field, Harrison Williams, Vincent Astor, Henry D. Whiten and other wealthy men are financing the undertaking.

Beebe was born at Brooklyn, N. Y., July 29, 1876. He took his B. S. degree at Columbia university in 1898. He is the author of numerous books on wild life.

The old lady came out of a half doze as the train approached a station. "Where are we, Bobby?" she asked.

"I don't know, grandma."

"But didn't the conductor call out something just now?"

"No, grandma; he just stuck his head inside the door and sneezed."

"Bobby," she exclaimed, "quick, help me with these things! This is Oshkosh."

NO CLOUD SEEN AS COOLIDGE TAKES REINS

Peace and Prosperity Loom as Chieftain is Sworn in.

PARTY'S LEADER

Inaugurated President "In His Own Right" Today.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Calvin Coolidge was inaugurated President of the United States "in his own right" today—and it is doubtful whether any incoming Executive in recent years ever began his tenure of office in circumstances that pointed more strongly to a peaceful and prosperous administration.

Undoubtedly the leader of his party, possessed of the confidence of the business interests of the country, and assured of a dependable working majority in the new congress that comes in with him, Calvin Coolidge lifted his right hand and took the oath today with no menacing clouds visible on his horizon, either at home or abroad.

Few of his predecessors have been so fortunate.

Twenty years ago today another President, who had beenVice-President, faced the same kind of a multitude in Capital Plaza. That was Roosevelt. He, too, had succeeded in becoming President "in his own right." But Roosevelt had no such auspicious start as Coolidge had today. Business was uneasy, as if already feeling the first breath of the financial storm that was to break two years later. And there were rumblings of party discontent, too, that were not lost upon the politicians gathered there.

Taft's Term.

Sixteen years ago this same day William H. Taft took the oath. The shadow of Roosevelt's leadership lay athwart Taft's inauguration. Ultimately that shadow grew and grew until at last it wreaked havoc with his administration and ultimately disrupted the Republican party.

Woodrow Wilson, in 1912, faced conditions not ideal. Politically the country was in turmoil over the Republican split. Business again was nervous over the policies that might be expected from the university professor who had become the first Democratic President in two decades. And too, he faced the task of translating an ambitious campaign program into legislative actuality.

The hint of the Great War that was to come was ever present that bleak, windy day that saw Wilson's second inaugural. There was more military display at that inauguration than had ever been seen before—more than has been seen since. The horizon was flecked with war clouds, black, ominous. Five weeks later they broke.

And only four years ago, when Warren G. Harding stepped resplendently forward, with upraised right hand, it was to face a volume of war reconstruction problems, mountainous in their extent and terrifying to a spirit less bold. The country was still at war, and there was political bitterness everywhere.

Calvin Coolidge confronted none of these conditions today.

Leads His Party.

Secure in his party leadership popular with the country and enjoying the confidence of business and industry to an extent that few of his predecessors have ever had this slight, reddish-haired New Englander began his new lease on the White House with every visible sign pointing to peace and prosperity.

At home business is humming. The farmer is getting back on his feet, stimulated by high priced wheat and corn. Money is easy. Unemployment is rare. The country, according to the bankers, has "turned the corner."

Abroad there are signs that Europe at last is emerging from that abyss of depression and turmoil in which she has labored since the war. The reparations controversy, which so harassed the Harding administration, has been adjusted—at least temporarily. The petty little wars that followed the armistice and retarded recovery have subsided.

There is today no controversy or problem in America's foreign relations that by any stretch of the imagination could lead to armed conflict.

This was Calvin Coolidge's heritage today, when he stepped into the White House "in his own right."

Perhaps it was because of all this that today's quadrennial show lacked some of the dramatic qualities of the others.

No Ostentation.

There was a decided lack of ostentation. No more parade than enough to lend dignity to the occasion; no "bleachers" lining the avenue; no "court of honor" in front of the White House; no pity for an outgoing President; no hotels filled with eager, whispering job seekers — President Coolidge weeks ago put his foot down on any ambitious program.

There is little of the dramatic in a President riding up Pennsylvania avenue by himself to be inaugurated. There was, it is true, a dramatic quality in Wilson's solitary passage through the famous thoroughfare, but Wilson himself was dramatic. Calvin Coolidge is not.

Most of the drama of today's historic spectacle is to be found in the biography of Calvin Coolidge—not in his lonely ride down the avenue to the great dome of the Capitol and the thousands beneath it.

Twenty-five years ago he was elected to his first public office. It was to the City Council of Northampton, Mass. He has never since then been out of public life, nor off the public payroll. He has traveled the road of public service from the deep valley to the mountain peak.

A year as Councilman, and then the rise—slow, gradual and non-spectacular. The City Solicitorship followed; then the clerkship court; then he went to the General Assembly; then to the State Senate, to the Lieutenant Governorship, to the Governor's mansion, to the Vice-Presidency, and then suddenly, whipped from the obscurity of that position by the whim of an inscrutable fate, elevated to the great office for which men have eaten their hearts out.

Congress is off Mr. Coolidge's hands for nine months. He has no intention of calling an extra session at which any new policies could be crystalized, unless something entirely unforseen arises between now and the regular convening time early in December.

Like Harding, he believes that the country in general and business in particular "want a rest from congress."

The Sixty-eighth congress, turbulent, insurgent, defiant, died with the old regime today. From the administration standpoint, it was the most unwept and unsung congress that ever expired. The new Sixty-ninth congress, elected on the crest of the Coolidge wave last November, will have a different atmosphere and a different attitude toward Coolidge.

Same Policies.

The continuance of the same policies and the same President, however, could not entirely do away with the impression of "a new administration."

For one thing, the country had a Vice President after being nineteen months without one.

General Charles G. Dawes will occupy a prominent position in the official life of Washington.

In the department there were some new faces. Charles Evans Hughes, who has gripped the foreign relations of the United States with a firmer grasp than any other Secretary of State in modern times, stepped out today as his successor, Frank B. Kellogg stepped in. That change may portend a marked difference in the conduct of American affairs abroad, but only time will tell.

There are those in Washington who predict an early recognition of Russia as a result of Hughe's retirement. His stern, unrelenting opposition has always stood in the way of it here to-fore. But they are in the minority.

Of the Cabinet which Coolidge inherited from Harding six members remain—Mellon, Weeks, Hoover, New, Work and Davis. The others are Mr. Coolidge's own appointees.

Meighan is Star In "Coming Through," Booked at Ceramic

Jack Bethea, author of "Bed Rock," the picturesque novel of the Alabama coal mines which Thomas Meighan has made into motion pictures under the title "Coming Through," was one of the most interested spectators of the thousands who watched the Meighan company at work on location at Birmingham, Ala., Bethea's home town.

The scenes were filmed at the same group of mines that inspired Mr. Bethea's story and the background, therefore, is as accurate as it is possible to conceive.

On several occasions Edward Sutherland, the director, called Mr. Bethea into consultation about details of the action, and once suggested to the author that he take the megaphone and direct a scene. Mr. Bethea was so surprised by the suggestion, having heard that authors had long been considered excess baggage around a motion picture production that he nearly fainted. Cold water was produced from a nearby stream, however, and he was quickly revived.

"Coming Through," adapted to the screen by Paul Schofield, features Lila Lee in the leading woman's role opposite the star. Wallace Beery is the villian. Others are Laurance Wheat, John Miltern, Frank Campeau, Gus Weinburg and Alice Knowland. "Coming Through," is the photoplay attraction at the Ceramic Theatre, commencing [illegible]nesday.

At one step, the new good Maxwell creates an immeasurably higher conception of the dollar's buying power in its relation to motor car speed and power.

The owner of this new good Maxwell finds in it an ability for sustained speed which wins his respect no matter how powerful the cars which he has driven before.

He becomes used to leading traffic in the city because of a flashing acceleration which is not surpassed by any car built today.

He finds himself enjoying these advantages at an operating and maintenance cost which owners declare is lower than any previous motor car experience has ever taught them to expect.

For the cause of this revolutionary achievement, credit the engineering genius which produced the Chrysler Six, the wonderful plants in which the new good Maxwell is manufactured from wheels to body, from radiator to rear axle.

In this new good Maxwell, Chrysler engineers and Maxwell's fine workmanship have advanced the ability of four cylinders beyond anything the industry had previously produced. We enthusiastically invite you to let us prove Maxwell's superior quality and value.

The New Good MAXWELL

By Elizabeth Dejeans

Elaine Dascome seemed to have returned to life with no very clear understanding of the past and with vague ideas as to the future. As a child, she had been very gentle and submissive, entirely biddable, until the tiny spot of irritation in her brain had aroused her to an irrational activity. It had given to her the exotic charm which had captured Dascome, and the wild irritability of her worst moments which had worked havoc in their lives. Now, she seemed to feel nothing acutely; she was simply a child of very moderate intelligence grown a little older; a clinging, affectionate child-woman, very pathetic in her complete trust an obedience; very like Mary Bliss deprived of haunting fear and with a somewhat vague memory restored. She seemed to regard Dascome much as, when she was a child, she had regarded her father—he would care for her always. The most pronounced thing about her was her delight in Clarice. she would listen by the hour to Clarice's tales of the studio. "When my face is well, I'll come and see you act," she told Clarice. Occasionally she had flashes of intelligence. Once she said to Dascome, "I'm only a little over forty, John, but in my body I feel the way I look. Even if my face is made to look better, I shall feel like an old woman, not as when you married me. I am so sorry."

"You're my dear little invalid wife, Elaine. Don't bother about me—think of that beautiful child you gave me. She'll have beautiful children some day. We'll be grandparents and have the right to feel old and experienced."

The nurse chanced to overhear this and she told another nurse. "I just went out and cried. They're p'tiful, those two. Why, he's only forty-three—young yet. She doesn't half realize, still she does more thinking that she's given credit for—poor little soul! And he's gone right down these last weeks—he'd better have a doctor for himself."

Clarice came to see Karesia often. From the freedom of her confidences, it was evident that she had no suspicion of Karesia's heartache. Clarice had begun to realize. "It is hard for father," she told Karesia sadly. "He is so gentle and kind to mother, but I can tell, his love died long ago—I mean the way a man loves a woman. He's sick with pity for her—all day long. He looks so ill. He's getting gray. I can see that everything's an effort to him—just his will keeps him going. I wonder sometimes, too, whether there isn't someone whom he loves and this has ended it all."

Rossiter spoke his mind very positively. "I tell you, Kara, it's too much for him. I'm sorry for her, but there is such a thing as common sense! She doesn't really need him—not the sacrifice he is making. If she freed him, let him marry you, she wouldn't miss him, so long as she had affectionate care. He's about the finest thing in the shape of a man I've ever known! My hope is that she'll grow intelligent enough to realize, and do the kind thing."

"I wouldn't stand for it!" Karesia exclaimed. "And he would never do it. Never! It would be forsaking his helpless wife!"

Karesia had grown pitifully white and agitated; Rossiter was afraid to tell her how alarmed he was about Dascome. He told her, "Ive talked business with Dascome a good deal lately. He's willing that Clarice should sign up with us. He advises her putting some of her money into our concern. I have been holding off with our big picture until she can give her time to it."

It was a relief to Karesia that Dascome could "talk business." Evidently Rossiter saw much of Clarice. They had not told her so, but she decided that they were engaged. Dascome would see to it that Clarice would be very valuable to Rossiter; not a wife to be lightly regarded; in reality, Randsome Rossiter's partner—a working partner.

Karesia herself could do no work; she had the numb feeling that she was waiting for an upheaval of some sort, some desperate distress that would drive her to her typewriter because it would be the only thing left in life. All these weeks and she had not heard Dascome's voice once—and he had not written to her! She understood; he was afraid he would go under, break; John Dascome was afraid of himself. He had said, "It's beyond me. You'll understand—and forgive me?"

WHO'S WHO

CAPTAIN WILLIAM BEEBE.

The Arcturus, a war-built wooden ship, Captain William Beebe commanding, which sailed from Tebo's basin, foot of Twenty-third street, Brooklyn, recently, is one of the strangest fishing expeditions ever known.

With a large equipment of traps, hooks, nets and dredges the Arcturus will visit the Sargasso sea, a vast floating continent of seaweed that lies between Cuba and African in the middle Atlantic ocean.

DR WILLIAM BEEBE

Below the surface of the Sargasso sea are strange monsters, whose like, according to marine tradition, has never been seen on sea or land. The scientific explanation for this is that millions of fish are caught in the net of seaweed and their decaying carcasses serve as carrion for undersea life, varieties of which exist in no other spot on the globe.

These are queer phosporescent creatures that flash and glimmer in the shadowed depths. Some are said to be illuminated with red, yellow and green lights like a Staten Island ferryboat. Octopuses 100 feet in diameter, capable of dragging a small vessel under the water, are said to roam this region. In ancient times the place was dreaded by sailors as a supernatural and haunted spot.

It has never been thoroughly explored. The Arcturus will move slowly through the seaweed collecting specimens. The expedition is backed by the department of tropical research of the New York Zoological society. Marshal Field, Harrison Williams, Vincent Astor, Henry D. Whiten and other wealthy men are financing the undertaking.

Beebe was born at Brooklyn, N. Y., July 29, 1876. He took his B. S. degree at Columbia university in 1898. He is the author of numerous books on wild life.

The old lady came out of a half doze as the train approached a station. "Where are we, Bobby?" she asked.

"I don't know, grandma."

"But didn't the conductor call out something just now?"

"No, grandma; he just stuck his head inside the door and sneezed."

"Bobby," she exclaimed, "quick, help me with these things! This is Oshkosh."

Peace and Prosperity Loom as Chieftain is Sworn in.

PARTY'S LEADER

Inaugurated President "In His Own Right" Today.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Calvin Coolidge was inaugurated President of the United States "in his own right" today—and it is doubtful whether any incoming Executive in recent years ever began his tenure of office in circumstances that pointed more strongly to a peaceful and prosperous administration.

Undoubtedly the leader of his party, possessed of the confidence of the business interests of the country, and assured of a dependable working majority in the new congress that comes in with him, Calvin Coolidge lifted his right hand and took the oath today with no menacing clouds visible on his horizon, either at home or abroad.

Few of his predecessors have been so fortunate.

Twenty years ago today another President, who had been Vice-President, faced the same kind of a multitude in Capital Plaza. That was Roosevelt. He, too, had succeeded in becoming President "in his own right." But Roosevelt had no such auspicious start as Coolidge had today. Business was uneasy, as if already feeling the first breath of the financial storm that was to break two years later. And there were rumblings of party discontent, too, that were not lost upon the politicians gathered there.

Taft's Term.

Sixteen years ago this same day William H. Taft took the oath. The shadow of Roosevelt's leadership lay athwart Taft's inauguration. Ultimately that shadow grew and grew until at last it wreaked havoc with his administration and ultimately disrupted the Republican party.

Woodrow Wilson, in 1912, faced conditions not ideal. Politically the country was in turmoil over the Republican split. Business again was nervous over the policies that might be expected from the university professor who had become the first Democratic President in two decades. And too, he faced the task of translating an ambitious campaign program into legislative actuality.

The hint of the Great War that was to come was ever present that bleak, windy day that saw Wilson's second inaugural. There was more military display at that inauguration than had ever been seen before—more than has been seen since. The horizon was flecked with war clouds, black, ominous. Five weeks later they broke.

And only four years ago, when Warren G. Harding stepped resplendently forward, with upraised right hand, it was to face a volume of war reconstruction problems, mountainous in their extent and terrifying to a spirit less bold. The country was still at war, and there was political bitterness everywhere.

Calvin Coolidge confronted none of these conditions today.

Leads His Party.

Secure in his party leadership popular with the country and enjoying the confidence of business and industry to an extent that few of his predecessors have ever had this slight, reddish-haired New Englander began his new lease on the White House with every visible sign pointing to peace and prosperity.

At home business is humming. The farmer is getting back on his feet, stimulated by high priced wheat and corn. Money is easy. Unemployment is rare. The country, according to the bankers, has "turned the corner."

Abroad there are signs that Europe at last is emerging from that abyss of depression and turmoil in which she has labored since the war. The reparations controversy, which so harassed the Harding administration, has been adjusted—at least temporarily. The petty little wars that followed the armistice and retarded recovery have subsided.

There is today no controversy or problem in America's foreign relations that by any stretch of the imagination could lead to armed conflict.

This was Calvin Coolidge's heritage today, when he stepped into the White House "in his own right."

Perhaps it was because of all this that today's quadrennial show lacked some of the dramatic qualities of the others.

No Ostentation.

There was a decided lack of ostentation. No more parade than enough to lend dignity to the occasion; no "bleachers" lining the avenue; no "court of honor" in front of the White House; no pity for an outgoing President; no hotels filled with eager, whispering job seekers — President Coolidge weeks ago put his foot down on any ambitious program.

There is little of the dramatic in a President riding up Pennsylvania avenue by himself to be inaugurated. There was, it is true, a dramatic quality in Wilson's solitary passage through the famous thoroughfare, but Wilson himself was dramatic. Calvin Coolidge is not.

Most of the drama of today's historic spectacle is to be found in the biography of Calvin Coolidge—not in his lonely ride down the avenue to the great dome of the Capitol and the thousands beneath it.

Twenty-five years ago he was elected to his first public office. It was to the City Council of Northampton, Mass. He has never since then been out of public life, nor off the public payroll. He has traveled the road of public service from the deep valley to the mountain peak.

A year as Councilman, and then the rise—slow, gradual and non-spectacular. The City Solicitorship followed; then the clerkship court; then he went to the General Assembly; then to the State Senate, to the Lieutenant Governorship, to the Governor's mansion, to the Vice-Presidency, and then suddenly, whipped from the obscurity of that position by the whim of an inscrutable fate, elevated to the great office for which men have eaten their hearts out.

Congress is off Mr. Coolidge's hands for nine months. He has no intention of calling an extra session at which any new policies could be crystalized, unless something entirely unforseen arises between now and the regular convening time early in December.

Like Harding, he believes that the country in general and business in particular "want a rest from congress."

The Sixty-eighth congress, turbulent, insurgent, defiant, died with the old regime today. From the administration standpoint, it was the most unwept and unsung congress that ever expired. The new Sixty-ninth congress, elected on the crest of the Coolidge wave last November, will have a different atmosphere and a different attitude toward Coolidge.

Same Policies.

The continuance of the same policies and the same President, however, could not entirely do away with the impression of "a new administration."

For one thing, the country had a Vice President after being nineteen months without one.

General Charles G. Dawes will occupy a prominent position in the official life of Washington.

In the department there were some new faces. Charles Evans Hughes, who has gripped the foreign relations of the United States with a firmer grasp than any other Secretary of State in modern times, stepped out today as his successor, Frank B. Kellogg stepped in. That change may protend a marked difference in the conduct of American affairs abroad, but only time will tell.

There are those in Washington who predict an early recognition of Russia as a result of Hughe's retirement. His stern, unrelenting opposition has always stood in the way of it here tofore. But they are in the minority.

The Best None Too Good

"After many years of stomach suffering I have at last found a medicine for that trouble. But believe me it was a timely find. I couldn't have lasted a great while longer. By stomach would bloat with gas like a barrel and the colics got to be awful. Medicine didn't help much until I got hold of Mayr's Wonderful Remedy, which did the trick. I am telling everyone about it." It is a simple, harmless preparation that removes the catarrhal mucous from the intestinal tract and allays the inflamation which causes practically all stomach, liver and intestinal ailments, including appendicitis. Meighan is Star In "Coming Through," Booked at Ceramic

Jack Bethea, author of "Bed Rock," the picturesque novel of the Alabama coal mines which Thomas Meighan has made into motion pictures under the title "Coming Through," was one of the most interested spectators of the thousands who watched the Meighan company at work on location at Birmingham, Ala., Bethea's home town.

The scenes were filmed at the same group of mines that inspired Mr. Bethea's story and the background, therefore, is as accurate as it is possible to conceive.

On several occasions Edward Sutherland, the director, called Mr. Bethea into consultation about details of the action, and once suggested to the author that he take the megaphone and direct a scene. Mr. Bethea was so surprised by the suggestion, having heard that authors had long been considered excess baggage around a motion picture production that he nearly fainted. Cold water was produced from a nearby stream, however, and he was quickly revived.

"Coming Through," adapted to the screen by Paul Schofield, features Lila Lee in the leading woman's role opposite the star. Wallace Beery is the villian. Others are Laurance Wheat, John Miltern, Frank Campeau, Gus Weinburg and Alice Knowland. "Coming Through," is the photoplay attraction at the Ceramic Theatre, commencing Monday.

At one step, the new good Maxwell creates an immeasurably higher conception of the dollar's buying power in its relation to motor car speed and power.

The owner of this new good Maxwell finds in it an ability for sustained speed which wins his respect no matter how powerful the cars which he has driven before.

He becomes used to leading traffic in the city because of a flashing acceleration which is not surpassed by any car built today.

He finds himself enjoying these advantages at an operating and maintenance cost which owners declare is lower than any previous motor car experience has ever taught them to expect.

For the cause of this revolutionary achievement, credit the engineering genius which produced the Chrysler Six, the wonderful plants in which the new good Maxwell is manufactured from wheels to body, from radiator to rear axle.

In this new good Maxwell, Chrysler engineers and Maxwell's fine workmanship have advanced the ability of four cylinders beyond anything the industry had previously produced. We enthusiastically invite you to let us prove Maxwell's superior quality and value.

Runyon Says

Pick Has New Thrills.
A Midget Motor Track Racing "In Your Lap."
The Author of Oldfield.
When He Had Locklear.

BY DAMON RUNYON.
Copyright, 1925, International Feature Service, Inc.

LOS ANGELES, Mar. 4.

WHAT will Bill Pickens think of next?

That is the question the writer asked himself after an afternoon of "automobile racing in your lap."

That is the way the picturesque Pickens describes it.

At Ascot, "the home of thrills," (Mr. Pickens again), not far from the heart of Los Angeles, is a track of only five eighths of a mile, around which spin tiny racing machines in thrilling contests.

These machines are mainly cut-down Fords, "hopped up," as Pickens says, meaning that they are geared for as much speed as possible. About all there is to some of the machines is the engine and four wheels and a perch for the driver.

They look like so many different colored bugs as they go tearing around the little rack. You almost expect some of the dinky racing cars to fly to pieces.

Many of the drivers are mechanics from the numerous garages of the city who have built their own cars in their spare time. They drive as desperately as their famous brethren of the big speedways.

In fact it is said that quite a number of noted drivers have come to the big game of the motor racing world from Pickens' Lilliputian track.

It is easy for a man to get killed at Ascot in the toy races as in any of the big motor stakes, perhaps easier.

The dark shadows of the sable shore hover over the small machines a tevery turn of the brief rack. It is a dirt track, banked or tilted at the turns.

The midget machines hit that first turn in a huddle, sometimes as many as a dozen machines in the 'field." You hold your breath as they go belting around the turn, on a slant, and wonder afterwards why they haven't all been wrecked.

It is a mighty unsafe game. The writer in years of acquaintance has never known Bill Pickens to be promoting a really SAFE game.

Mr. Pickens has long been a purveyor to the public of spine-chilling thrills.

He is a fat, blond man, with a large pleasant face and a great gift of gab. His oily tongue has for many years been pouring carefully executed phrases in the ears of sports writers, city editors and others.

He was long manager of Barney Oldfield, the most famous racing driver the game has ever known. It wasn't always so much what Barney did as what Bill Pickens said he COULD do that accouned for much of his fame.

Of course there is no doubt Oldfield was a GREAT driver, surely the GREATEST of his day.

But it was Pickens who elaborated on Barney's skill at the wheel of a racing car to the extent that Oldfield known all over the world. If you are not familiar with the automobile racing game, and are asked to name some famous driver you immediately think of Oldfield.

That was Bill Pickens.

Such was Pickens' pertinacity in publicity when he managed Oldfield, he made the name Oldfield synonomous with auto racing, with great speed—with greater speed, in fact, than Oldfield or anybody else could ever get out of a motor car.

That was publicity genius.

After Oldfield retired the scope of motor racing didn't seem wide enough for Bill Pickens' genius for the time being.

He saw possibilities in the air—in aviation. That was dangerous. That possessed thrills which Pickens knows the public liked to enjoy, the element of great DANGER.

This thrill, boldly summed up, is the possibility of someone getting KILLED. It sounds cruel. Some may hotly deny that they were ever attracted to a dangerous stunt by this possibility.

But the fact that they were ever attracted to a dangerous stunt by this possibility.

But the fact remains, and you know it, that the possibility is always a strong attraction. Before automobile racing, before aviation, the bicycle riders "leaping the gap" were the big thrillers, before then the daring wire and trapeze performers and the lion tamers of the circus.

Down in Texas Bill Pickens discovered one Lieutenant Locklear, a flier who could stand on his head on the wings of his plane in air, and do other stunts on a flying machine.

Bill Pickens lavishly explointed Locklear's daring, made him a tremendous attraction at fairs and the like. The Texas flier made a small fortune, would have eventually become rich, Pickens says, but he got killed performing for a moving picture.

Now there are aviators who make Locklier's most astounding exploits seem quite simple. They all FOLLOWED Locklear, however. He was FIRST to demonstrate that seemingly impossible things could be done on an airplane.

Salineville High School Has Three Court Dates Open

Mackey's Eye Finds Hoops For 11 Goals

Scores Five Fouls, Too, as M. P. Five Downs M. E.

Chalk up another victory for the First Methodist Protestant passers of the Sunday school circuit. Last night they sent the M. E. quintet down the road to defeat by the score of 37 to 31, in one of the best played league clashes of the season.

The M. P. Juniors also helped make it a big night by copping the preliminary, 51 to 28.

The main go was fast all the way, the Fifth street church lads depending on short passes up the floor for field goals while their foes took more chances on long shots, with Mackey as their mainstay on shot beneath the basket.

Mackey did a neat job, too, evading the defense for 11 field goals and five fouls. The M. E.'s had lost out before they found a way to stop Mackey. But while he was causing joy for the M. P. rooters, Cunningham, for the M. E five, was keeping his team mates right on the heels of the leaders. He found the net for seven double deckers.

The M. E. lads got away to a two-point lead before the enemy found the basket. The Fifth streeters dropped behind on Todd's foul and Mackey's field goal. After this the M. P. squad stayed out in front most of the time. In crucial moments the M. P. outfit would depend upon Mackey to pull them through.

The winners led, 18 to 15, at the half. With six minutes to play in the final half, the M. E. five spurted to a six point lead, but Mackey got into action and the M. P.'s whittled away their foes' lead, finally landing in front. Weikart and Todd played well for the winners while Bromby and Nease put up classy games for the M. E. five.

The preliminary was close all the way, with the M. E. Juniors out in front for three quarters. In the final period, the M. P. youngsters forged ahead, with a half-minute to go, by one point. Bailey's field goal from the center of the court, cinched the contest. Bailey, Bettridge and Burke were the leading lights for the winners while Menge, Howard and Small starred for the M. E.

Liverpool Motors And E. M. Knowles Join Indoor Loop

E. M. Knowles and the Liverpool Motors are two new entries in the "Y" industrial indoor baseball circuit.

The Knowles and Motors teams formally became members of the circuit last night. There is room for two and possible three more teams, officials announced today.

Two games are scheduled for tonight. Potters and Babcock-Wilcox will clash at 7 o'clock. The Laughlin and Crockery City crews will follow them up.

Rigney, Erstwhile Regular, Trying to Stand Off Jack Tavenor at Shortstop, the Uncertain Post.

AUGUSTA, Ga., Mar. 4—After advising the youth of the nation about the several and sundry advantages of a western habitat, the late Horace Greeley probably concluded the interview with these few, well chosen words:

"Draw down to your hand, young man, draw down to your hand."

A young man with a shirt to his back, who didn't, was likely to find himself occupying the great open spaces as a bed chamber. Furthermore, he might still have the back but not the shirt. By that time it usually loved another.

Ty Cobb, the well known Major leaguer, probably never heard the parable of the young man and his fickle shirt. Of the thirty two active players on the Detroit roster at the moment, only nine were in the minor leagues last year. In brief, Tyrus is sitting behind three aces and expects to make them stand up. He virtually is standing pat while the rest of the boys are drawing plenty. This is one of several features which make the camp a rather unique institution. Another is embodied in a drastic rule that confines the manly athletes to two meals a day. A third feature the fact that not a ball was tossed here until Monday for the reason that no players were in camp. A fourth is the epidemic of buzzards which hover over the playing field.

I was going to make a nasty remark about buzzards always following the dead, but I won't. Anyhow, it is pretty generally admitted that the local variety of buzzards is inclined to be a bit neutrolic. Our Mr. Cobb, in fact, simply ignores them.

"No, no, I won't discuss the other teams," he said today in his quick, nervous way.

"I don't pick pennant races. I just try to develop ball clubs. I think I am justified in standing pat. We have only one position open.

"Ball players eat too much, except when they are working under me. Two meals are enough for any man in active training.

"As for our late start, I don't believe in an early one. That's a pretty good reason."

The open position is at shortstop, where Emory Rigney, regular for several seasons, is attempting to stand off Jack Tavenor, a bright, ambitious young man who is willing to start at the top and work up. Rigney lost caset with Cobb last year by some five-thumbed fielding at critical junctures. He now is running second to Tavenor—an undersized ball hawk who only hits over so often. This reflects the general tendency of the Detroit club away from hitting in favor of defense.

Travenor, up from Fort Worth, is one of the nine new men, the other eight are George Artus, semi-pro catcher from Paterson, N. J.; H. C. Carlisle, outfielder, from Charlotte, N. C.; Jesse Dayle, back again on the big time; Andy Harrington, semi-pro infielder; Bill Johnson, semi-pro pitcher from Newberry, Mich.; Bill Moore, pitcher from Rochester; Johnny Neunn, first baseman, from St. Paul; and John Walker, from Union, S. C.

Neunn and Carlisle are the only ones, aside from Tavenor, who have a white man's chance. Carlisle, scant 18-year-old and a gent who comports himself after the manner of Ken Williams, without the latter's generous feet, is supposed to take Cobb's job ultimately. He hit .346 for Charlotte last year, his first in professional baseball.

Neun will be kept around to understudy Blue at first base. The rest of the infield will be made up of Frank O'Rourke at second base, Tavenor, or Rigney at shortstop, and Bobby Jones at third base.

Cobb, Heilman, Fothergill, Manusch and Wingo will be the outfielders; Bassler and Woodall, the catchers.

The pitching staff will embrace Collins, Whitehill, Cole, Leonard, Dauss, Pillette, Sylvester, Johnson, Holloway, Stoner and Wells. It is the best by far the Tigers have mustered in many years. The last good one was the Donovan-Mullin-Killian-Willett - Summers combination of 1909. The Tigers won the pennant that year, this remark being offered for what it may be worth, if anything.

After Another Record.

NEW YORK, Mar. 4—Paavo Nurmi, the Finish record smasher, will continue his intensive runing campaign tonight when he will attempt to better the mark for the mile and one eighth distance in the indoor games at the 106th Armory in Brooklyn.

Willie Ritola, Carl Christiernsen, Swedish hurdling chompion, and Willie plant, American walking champion, also will compete in the games.

Barney Bricelin, veteran semi-pro baseballer, and manager of the 1925 Newell Laughlin baseball club, is a patient in the East Liverpool City hospital.

Saturday Is Deadline For Duck Entries

District Tournament at Liberty Alleys to Start Monday.

"District duckpin bowlers—you have until 11 o'clock Saturday night to get into the lists for championship tournament play next week on the Liberty alleys."

This was the announcement today by Manager Steel, of the Liberty alleys, under whose direction the maples will fall on four days of the coming week as old champs and new contend for 1925 duck laurels.

Over 150 names have been placed on the entry list up to date. More are expected before Saturday night—the last chance.

Steele pointed out today that fees must be in the hands of the tournament directors by Saturday night, as well as entries.

The tournament will get under way at 6 o'clock on Monday night. Play for the night will suspend at 11 o'clock. A similar program will be maintained during Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday.

There will be matches in singles and doubles for each contender, with total pins to count.

Four alleys will be in operation throughout the tourney.

18.2 Realm Bows to New Champ Today

Jake Schaefer Sets Two World Records in Winning Crown.

CHICAGO, March 4.—The 18.2 balkline realm bowed to a new monarch today—"Young" Jake Schaefer who last night again wrested the crown from Willie Hoppe in the finale of the International Balkline tourney here. The score was 400 to 173 for eight innings.

In walking away with the honors, Schaefer set two new world's records, one for his high run of 400 in his match with Erich Hagenlacher and the other for his grand average of 57.14.

Behind him at the finish was Edouard Horemans, Belgium, with a grand average of 45.13 and a high run of 240. This gives Horemans the right to challenge the champion, although no championship match can be played before October at the earliest.

Hoppe finished in fourth place with a grand average of 26.69. His high run during the tourney was 197.

Hagenlacher finished third, having lost to Horemans in the afternoon match yesterday, 254 to 400 in 8 frames.

Texas Rangers, about whom much spicy and romantic as well as adventurous fiction has been written, and who have operated under a law more than ninety years old, have been declared unconstitutional. With a loss of salary facing the members, it is likely the organization will cease to function. A Texas ranger was reputed to be the only man single handed to unarm Pancho Villa.

TRAINING CAMP CHATTER

TAMPA, Fla., Mar. 4—With the announcement that Walter Johnson has signed a two-year contract, all doubt as to whether the famous pitcher would remain with the Washington Senators vanished and the team stepped out in the brisk morning air for a stiff workout. The salary figures in Johnson's contract were refused.

All of the Senators are here now but Gregg and he is on his way. All are said to be under contract but Reuther. Harris is putting his men through a half mile run each day, medicine ball play, and light batting and fielding practice.

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 4—Talk was quite flagrant today of the Boston Braves making an eleventh hour trade for Lowery, second baseman of the Jersey City team.

The Braves are putting in some good batting and fielding practice each afternoon. Manager Bancroft is authority for the statement that the men are in better form now than during last year.

AUGUSTA, Ga., March 4.—Ty Cobb will not play baseball after this year and will manage the Tigers from the bench, the Georgian stated today.

"I will play less than 100 games this year," he said, "but I am not figuring on playing at all next season. It is time for me to quit. This year, if I am in shape, I will start the season, but later on I will have a man ready to take my place and then will take it easy."

Cobb believes now that he can be of greater value to the club as a bench manager than when he divides his time between managing the club and playing.

Last Night's Fights

Stribling Wins.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Mar. 4—William "Young" Stribling, the Atlanta school boy, outpointed Dan O'Dowd, Boston lightheavyweight, here last night in ten rounds. After warming up slowly the young Georgian took the fight to his heavier opponent.

The suggested new race will be for yachts not exceeding 50 feet on the water line, and the course will be from Cowes to Plymouth.

11 Contenders Are Out For Honors In New Concord Games

Winners Will be Sent to Columbus for Finals in State-wide Elimination Contests to Decide Buckeye School Champions; Two More Practice Sessions Scheduled for Locals.

East Liverpool high school basketeers will make their preliminary bid for a state-wide court fame on Friday and Saturday of this week at Muskingum college, New Concord, in the district scholastic tournament.

The district tourney is the first stage in the elimination process that decides annually the school team champions of the Bucyeye state. Tournaments of a similar nature will be held throughout Ohio.

The cream of tournament play will go to Columbus for the concluding and decisive contests from which will emerge a new band of school basketball kings.

Followers of the Blue and White want to see the Ceramic City aggregation in action at Columbus. Coach O. V. Boone, however, refuses to be overly optimistic.

The East Liverpool squad is scheduled to leave here on Thursday afternoon at 3:35. They will arrive that night in New Concord.

The team will be on hand in the New Concord gym at 9 o'clock Friday morning for the drawing. The first game of the tournament will start at 10 o'clock. The school teams will play throughout Friday and Saturday until the tourney winners are crowned.

There will be 11 teams in action, according to information received yesterday afternoon by Coach Boone. Although the names of the entries were not specified, it is likely that the list will include Zanesville, Cambridge, Coshocton, McConnellsville, East Liverpool, New Philadelphia, Marietta, and probably Wellsville, Steubenville and Bellaire.

The local squad will go through their paces this afternoon. On Thursday afternoon they have a short session prior to boarding a C. & P. train for Bridgeport.

Elementary Girls' Teams Are Formed

Play First Games March 23-24; Tournament March 26-27.

Grade school basketball activities, which were launched last week on the high school court, will not be solely for the boys. Girls will have their games, as well, according to announcement today by Athletic Director O. V. Boone, who outlines plans for competition among elementary school girls' teams.

A series of games will be played on March 23 and 24. The place has not been decided upon.

These games will be followed by a tournament on March 26 and 27. A silver loving cup will be given to the school winning the tourney.

A member of the high school girls' team will be assigned to each school to act in the capacity of coach.

Eligibility requirements, and admission prices will be the same as those governing boys' games

The girls have started practice sessions in the high school gymnasium. Central and McKinley drilled yesterday. The remainder of the practice schedule follows: Thursday, March 5, Horace-Mann, Neville and Garfield; Tuesday, March 10, Washington and Pleasant Heights; Thursday, March 12, Lincoln and Sixth street; Monday, March 23, Garfield and Horace-Mann, Neville, Washington and Lincoln; Tuesday, March 24, Pleasant Heights and Sixth street, Central and McKinley.

FOR TEN YEARS—DEPENDABLE

Exceptional dependability has been a characteristic of Dodge Brothers Motor Car since the day the first of these sturdy cars was marketed.

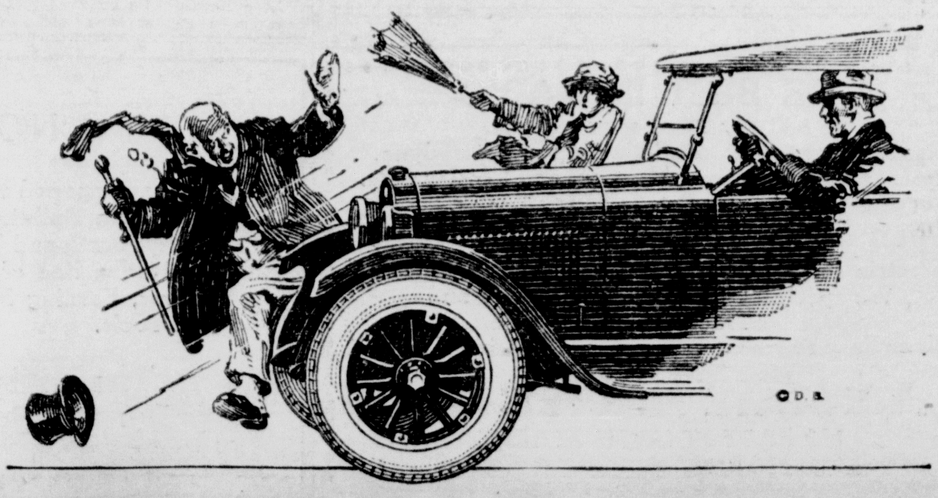

Not once in a decade has it failed to uphold and enhance its reputation for faithful performance.

The reason for its consistent goodness and continued betterment points directly back to the ideals of the founders.

Instead of fluctuating between an endless series of annual models, they determined to concentrate on the perfection of a single chassis.

Dodge Brothers Motor Car today is the embodiment of that ideal—an ideal that will endure as long as the institution itself.

Welter Champion Tosses Defi at Mexican Heavy

LOS ANGELES, March 4.—One of the strangest matches in the history of the ring was in the making here today.

Mickey Walker, welterweight champion, has challenged Tony Fuente, the Mexican heavyweight, who recently figured in a sensational knockout bout with Fred Fulton, the plasterer from Minnesota. Although Fuente weighs more than 210 pounds, Walker announced he was anxious to box the Mexican and was certain he could knock him out.

Team Championship Is Goal Sought in Miami Tournament

MIAMI, Fla., March 4.—Sixteen golf professionals, every one of them a champion in some section of the nation, and holding practically every title worthy of note held by a professional, today started their quest for the international team championship on the Miami Country club course.

For three days, an ever-narrowing field will battle in 36 hole best ball elimination rounds. Champions will fall by eights, then by fours and finally by twos until the holders of the crown, now worn jointly by MacDonald Smith and Billy Melhorn, are determined in the final 36 hole match play Friday.

It is the second match to start which will draw the bulk of the gallery. MacDonald Smith, who has been here for a week practicing, and Billy Melhorn, who has spent most of the winter at the course, the defending champions, will take on Gene Sarazen, and Leo Diegel, leaders in the Professional Golf league of Florida, and one of the teams most feared in the tourney.

Berlenbach-Siki Matched.

NEW YORK, Mar. 4—Battling Siki, formerly light heavyweight champion of the world, and Paul Berlenbach, the "Kayo King," have been matched for a bout at Madison Square Garden for March 13.

Radio sets and parts are sold in many kinds of stores in Vienna, including barber and perfumery shops and places where scientific instruments are sold.

A. If the tree is a single tree, the chances are that the variety is sterile with its own pollen. There is nothing to do but bud or graft another variety on it. Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Easily and cheaply made at home, but it beats them all for quick results.

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using the well-known old recipe for making cough syrup at home. It is simple and cheap but it has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from any druggist, pour it into a pint bottle and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make a full pint. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, it tastes good, keeps perfectly, and lasts a family a long time.

It's truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens and raises the phlegm, soothes and heals the membranes, and gradually but surely the annoying throat tickle and dreaded cough disappear entirely. Nothing better for bronchitis, spasmodic croup, hoarseness or bronchial asthma.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its healing effect on the membranes.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Precedent Is Set as Ex-President Gives Oath of Office to President

The inauguration of Calvin Coolidge marks the first time that the oath of office has been given to a president of the United States by a former president. Chief executives are sworn in by the chief justice of the United States, and Chief Justice William Howard Taft was the twenty-seventh president. The president and the chief justice are shown.

CARD OF THANKS.

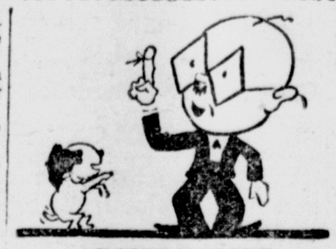

We desire to thank the neighbors and friends who so kindly assisted in any way during the sickness and death of our little darling, Margery Greer.

We desire to thank the Berean Bible class, the Wyoming club and all those who sent floral offerings. Especially do we thank the Rev. B. R. Johnson for his kind words of sympathy.

"Help Yourself" Hotel Liked.

At Pearsall, Tex., the sheriff of the county, H. L. Brooks, has put into operation a "help yourself" hotel, and the guests appear to like it. The guests register without assistance, erasing from a nearby blackboard, the number of the room they select. When they leave after a day or a month, they put the money to pay for their stay in an envelope and drop it into a locked box near the door. The hotel owner seldom appears, there is no cashier and servants give unobtrusive service. Mr. Brooks says he has been cheated out of only $2 thus far.
